He startled Arizona when he landscaped his desert camp outside Phoenix with native things of the desert, which local folks had paid no attention to: prickly pear, yuccas, staghorn cholla, mesquite, palos verde trees, barrel cactus, sajuaro. (See how they compose on page 236.)

IN WISCONSIN he uses ferns, wild geranium, bloodroot, wild crocus, bittersweet, wild phlox, harebells, Solomon's Seal, wild lilies, day-lilies, funkia, sweetbriar roses, periwinkle. His houses use the grammar of treillage very frequently, and he uses grape vines for them, because he likes the character of their coverage, both bare and in leaf. He likes the way the drape on the structure and the forms made by the vines themselves.

Indoors he uses native plants

Cut branches of trees and shrubs are always being tucked overhead, below clerestory windows. They merge with the foliage and branches seen through these high windows, giving you the feeling that you are not really indoors.

oo. He has found that evergreens uch as Pfitzer junipers do well in ndoor plant beds. He has been loing container-gardening for four r five decades, though most people re just now discovering "pot ardening."

IE USES fruit trees a great deal for several reasons: They have unk shapes with character: they ut on a flower show and pay a ividend in fruit. Other plants of haracter he likes and uses, where ıey are native, are juniper, barerry, wild plum and birch. He kes trees and shrubs that grow ıst enough so he can cut boughs rofusely and bring them indoors decorate rooms. Cutting fresh oughs of leaves is a weekly rouıe at Taliesin, part of getting ady for the week-end parties and ıests. And wonderful arrangeents of weeds and wild flowers—pecially those that few others em to appreciate—are everywhere ere. He has grown so fond of tree liage indoors that one is almost d to believe that he designs his chitecture to receive the boughs acefully.

When breaking into a site to rt construction, he takes the eatest pains to preserve the ants that are already there, deıning in order to feature them, possible, but, if not, moving them another spot nearby so they can ain take their place in relation the house. His motto, in this gard, is, "as much as necessary, it as little as possible."

He likes fountains and reflecting pools. He did one of the first half-in-the-house, half-outside-the-house pools—an idea which has swept the West Coast since then. He likes water jets for the noise they make and for the way the fine spray, blowing in the breeze, creates rainbows.

In general, he is against the monotony or the didactic repetition of a plant or a motif though there are always exceptions to the general statement.

AT TALIESIN in Wisconsin there is one great big show, with one acre. "The Petunia Acre," they call it—an acre of petunias planted at the turn of the road where the road leaves the highway to enter Wright's 2,500-acre estate. It's a show all right! Not only does the passerby see it, but the inhabitants in the big house up on the hill see it clearly since it is visible a half mile away as a big pink and purple carpet lying in a green meadow—a decoration for the entire valley. Then you see that the petunias were planted in clumps, by colors, to produce the tapestry-like effect, symbolic of Mr. Wright's complete care for details as well as over-all architectural and landscape effects.

Recently he has been doing more and more with one small, confined area which can be kept up really well, letting the rest go wild—if the surrounding environment will permit it. All in all, perhaps it would be best to say that for Mr. Wright architecture covers everything.

In Mr. Wright's studio, fresh maple branches or oak branches are cut every Saturday, to be arranged just as though they were cut flowers. Rack is for viewing his famous, private collection of Japanese prints.

THE POETRY OF STRUCTURE

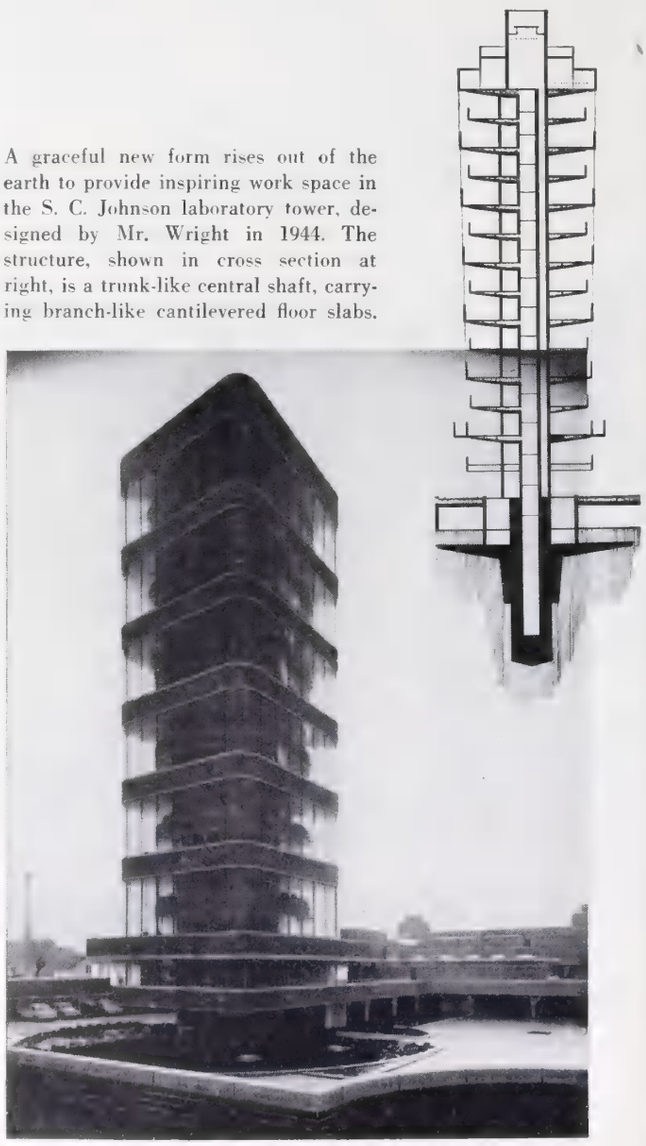
Familiar materials, like bricks and boards, take on a new vitality in his buildings. We find ourselves seeing the poetry of the clay structure of a single brick multiplied to true grandeur in the weight-bearing solidity of a whole mass of bricks laid into masonry.



In the same way, planks and boards become noble not simply for the natural richness of their grain, but because they take on new significance when, out of the character of the wood itself, he creates new construction patterns.

In Europe, wood has been a luxury material for centuries. In our country it is plentiful, but as we know it: not the hand-hewn timbers as known in Elizabethan England. We have, instead, machine-milled boards. Mr. Wright's own Arizona home (see page 237) is an example of his use of lumber to develop structural form that becomes, in itself, the ornamentation of the building. Here the wood tresses overhead, built up of redwood boards, take their form from the boards they are made of, from their one-directional strength. The repetition of this structural pattern rises out of the stone substructure with the same harmony that the pattern of branches and leaves develops from the massive trunk of a tree.

Like a fountain of imagination, Frank Lloyd Wright creates, with energy and logic, new forms for better ways of building. As you can see in the pages of this issue, concrete alone has taken many roles in his work. The material that well gives form to the Guggenheim Museum (see symbol on page 255), 50 years ago inspired the design for Unity Church in Oak Park (famous as the first monolithically poured concrete building). Fifteen years later Mr. Wright invented the method of concrete block construction that resulted in the poetry of the Ennis house (see page 252), its "textile" walls made up of con-

A graceful new form rises out of the earth to provide inspiring work space in the S. C. Johnson laboratory tower, designed by Mr. Wright in 1944. The structure, shown in cross section at right, is a trunk-like central shaft, carrying branch-like cantilevered floor slabs.

Solid wood walls, instead of 2" x 4" framing, express their beauty in the open, flowing plan of the 1952 residence of the Kenneth Laurents of Rockford, Illinois. Made with a central core of plywood with boards screwed on each side, these laminated panels gain structural strength and beauty through curves and angles.

The pattern of the roof framing makes the ceiling a boldly rhythmic ornamentation throughout residence of Mr. and Mrs. Albert Adelman, Fox Point, Wisconsin. Strong pattern of rafters is accentuated by quiet repose of horizontal boards in partitions.

...A COLLECTION OF RUGS BY FRANK LLOYD WRIGHT FOR KARASTAN

In the firm belief that today's home requires a rug as fresh and provocative as the new trends in building design, we've asked Frank Lloyd Wright to create a series of rugs for Karastan. The Taliesin Collection, to be introduced next Spring, is still on the drawing boards. But we can safely predict that it will be as beautiful and liveable, as thoughtful and original as everything this great designer has done.

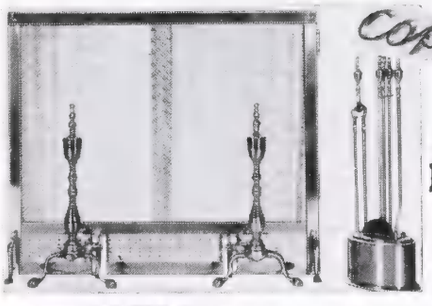
crete blocks and a warp and woof of slender reinforcing rods. The rich tapestry is emphasized by the ornamentation and piercing of the individual blocks.

At the same time that Falling Water with its plastic reinforced slabs was being built, Mr. Wright was also developing a totally different expression of concrete in the solid stone work of Taliesin West (page 237). Here concrete binds together great rocks and boulders into a massive base for the overhead wood construction.

These poured walls were a solution for building with unskilled labor, using the rocks of the desert. These rocks are plentiful in the desert and beautiful in their multicolored variety. But their iron-hard quality makes it impossible to cut or shape them for use in traditional masonry methods.

To construct these poured walls, wood forms are built; the rocks are placed inside; then concrete is poured around them. In the outward form of this masonry we see the expression of their inner structure: The binding qualities of concrete, customarily used in mortar with bricks or stone, create a new "nature form" in the Arizona desert region.



In the Middle West, the laboratory tower of the S. C. Johnson Company is still another new form expressing reinforced concrete at work. There are no conventional supporting walls or piers. This tower stands like a tree (page 348), its central shaft anchored into the ground like a tap root. As the central trunk rises toward the sky, the floors spread out from it like branches. The structural form of the tower is based on the same principles that gave shape to the columns of the adjoining administration building constructed for the Johnson Company in 1936 (see page 257).

The shimmering form of the tower owes its vitality to the architect's sensitivity to the structural capabilities of building materials. In Frank Lloyd Wright's hands concrete "sings." The veil of glass that encloses these laboratories also "sings" in its crystalline glassiness as a functional and beautiful protection for the interior space.

The examples of his work all through the pages of this issue represent only a fragment of his tremendous energy—some 800 buildings to date and many more on the way. Each of them is a great poem glorifying the purpose of the building, its kinship to the natural environment, based on the character of its interior structure. These values, the same ones that govern the development of all the natural forms we know, have come to be the basis of modern architecture through his work.

"My father—a preacher and minister—taught me to regard a symphony as an edifice of sound. And ever since, as I listen to Bach and Beethoven and Mozart, I have watched the builder build and learned many valuable things from music—another phase of understanding nature."

MUSIC AND . . .

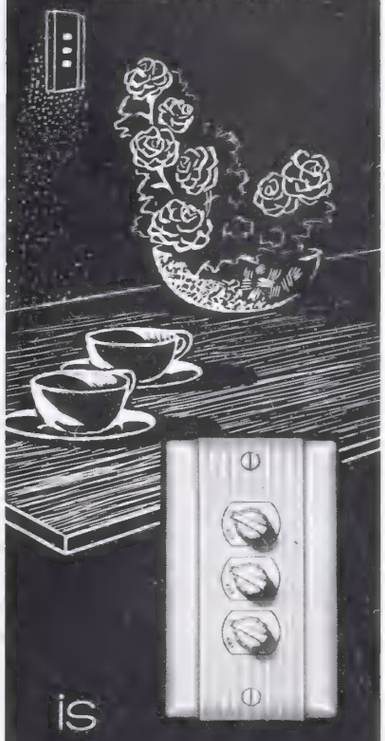
heart. They have learned technique, but not the main principle, just as so many modern builders master technique—never the underlying principle."

Saturday night after dinner we went into the theater, a simple and superb building which rises in gradual and pleasant tiers. It was designed by Mr. Wright and built by the Fellowship. Here we heard a young violinist play Bartok's Roumanian Dances and then compositions for the piano by Mrs. Wright were played.

THE next morning was Easter Sunday, and Easter breakfast was being served. Before breakfast the chorus sang, and there was an egg hunt. The breakfast was one of the most enchanting meals that I've ever had. It was served outdoors on long tables decorated with colored Easter eggs, with brilliant desert flowers and with miniature Japanese parasols. We sat at one of the long tables and ate baba, a traditional Russian bread which had been baked the night before, and paskha, made of cottage cheese, ground almonds, raisins, egg yolks and sugar.

There was a separate table filled with toys for the children—by this time, what with visitors, family, and assorted offspring, the company had grown to over a hundred. There was much discussion of music at our table.



To Tolstoy, too, music was "a manifestation of the human soul," able to arouse his own creative capacity. That is the way in which music is used in Arizona, not merely to be "listened to" but as a gift from life, able to stimulate life and to aid you in the fulfillment of your personality. Music can help you in achieving whatever work you wish to achieve. It can help bring to the surface the ideas for which you grope. Everybody, according to Frank Lloyd Wright, can use music that way—and one need not live in Arizona to use it so.

As I left, Mr. Wright said to me, "Remember that we are musical amateurs. But God loves an amateur."

"Father sometimes played on the piano far into the night, and much of Beethoven and Bach I learned as a boy as I lay listening. Living seemed a kind of listening to me—then."

One sees the house thus from the desert. A thing of beauty and romance, it is sheltered from the sun by great circles of parasol-like roofs.

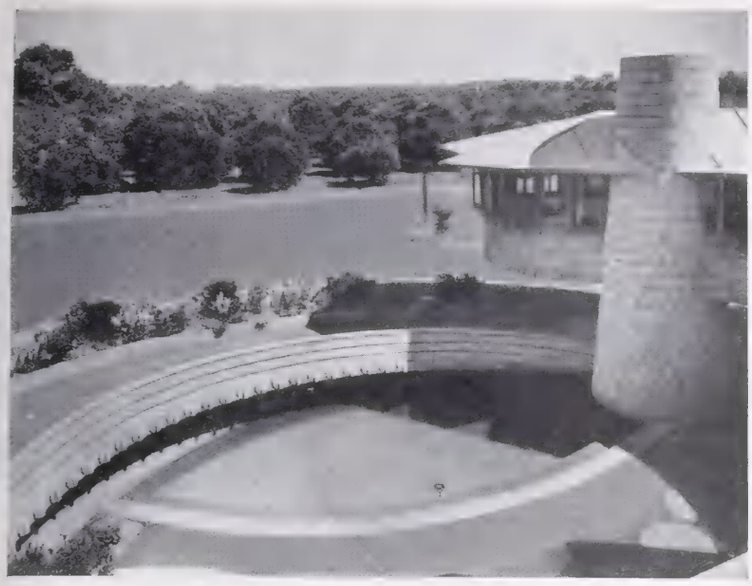
of interlocking circles (see bottom of page 280), which repeats the circular theme of the house and served as the edge-form for the poured-concrete floor slab. All the other blocks throughout the home are standard sizes and shapes except the short-radius curved ends of the piers. "Vibrapac" machines make it simple for local concrete block manufacturers to produce special shapes like these.



The course of decorative blocks always marks or "expresses" the floor slabs, as can be seen in the pictures above and below. Their pattern, as we have said, is a flowering of the play of circles that constitutes the main theme of the entire David Wright house. Thus their pattern is integral pattern, a major principle in the architectural philosophy of Frank Lloyd Wright: (a) The blocks are made of the same material and units as the house itself; (b) Their pattern exploits the plastic nature of the concrete they are made of; (c) The pattern is in complete harmony with the over-all structural form (circular); and (d) Their pattern underlines and emphasizes the structure itself (in this case, the floor-line).

This play of circles and arcs is one of the most effective examples of Mr. Wright's principle of integration, where form, function and enriching ornament are one and indivisible. A quick look at the plans on page 279 and the accompanying photographs will show how this is true as much for the interior spaces as for the exterior forms, which they determined and with which they were clearly planned.

There is, to begin with, the perfect circle of the house plans and the inner garden court, the two dominant elements, of course, the entire composition. The circ is given solidity by the use of t tower form, depth and height employing a spiraling ramp, v ume and space by the pie-wed shape of the rooms and the cu vaceous windows. There are t circles of the roof like great sha ing umbrellas, and two arcs of circle to form the elliptical po There are circles of concrete ste ping across the court to the begi ning of the ramp. There is a c cular pattern in the mahoga ceiling, a perfect circle of a fi place in both the living room a master bedroom.

And there is, as we have alrea mentioned, the circular theme the decorative blocks. Here come to Mr. Wright's integrati not only of pattern and form b of pattern and function. Besid being decorative in the nature the material and in the structu form, the decoration has a distin function: The small protuberan act as drip points which carry aw water from the house itself and prevent weather staining of t slab. The same is true of the dent lated enameled sheet metal edge the roof. The dentillations, li dangling fingers, drip water aw from the walls during rain.

At the same time, the decorati dentils perform an additional thetic function: They soften otherwise hard line which, M Wright tells us, is particularly u wanted in the harsh desert gla They seem to lighten the feeling the house, as well, adding a natu gaiety, like foliage or flowers to plant. They are a somewhat ine plicable touch which makes of t David Wright house a desert orga ism, half-animal, half-vegetable, rather makes it visibly and unmistakably so. The way the house coils from the desert like a growing thing, above it yet part of it, results from its organically conceived architecture.

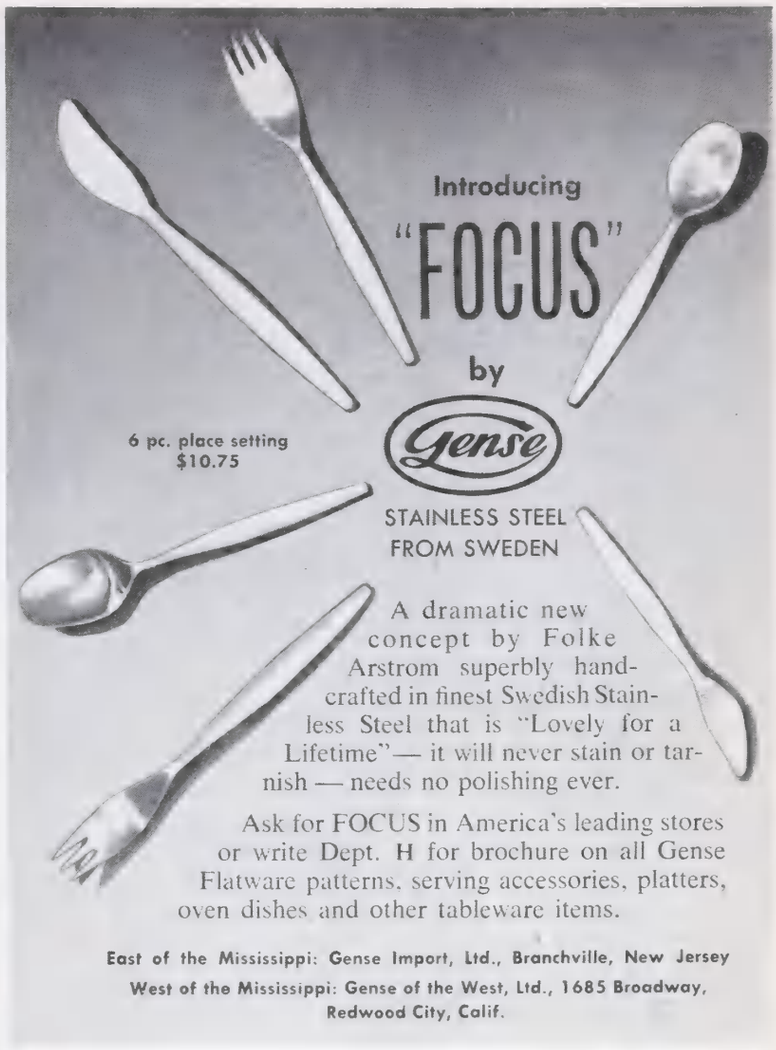
If there is one phrase, one thing, which Mr. Wright would wish to burn forever into our minds, it would be organic architecture. To understand this phrase is to appreciate his work; to understand his work is to appreciate this phrase. He has tried to define it and, we fear, has failed, because defining it would be roughly equivalent to defining life, which, at the most, we can only describe.

But if we cannot define organic architecture definitively, we can describe it, as we do life, when and where we find it. Here, in the David Wright house we find it in the work of our greatest genius at 84. (He is now 86.) The word genius, however, does not explain it. There have been a few geniuses in the past who have painted one picture, designed one building or composed one piece of music, and then have spent the rest of their lives doing adaptations or straight copies of it.



This has not been true of Frank Lloyd Wright, thanks primarily, we believe, to his philosophy of organic architecture as much as to his special genius, which he himself considers extreme sensitivity and response to the promises and problems of our time. It has kept him from settling on one particular form or formula. It has, to put it simply, kept him natural, as flexible in his approach to each situation as nature. In this sense the Wrightian law is the law of nature, which is the law of change, of adaptation, of flexibility, and so of creation.

That is the meaning of his extraordinary and penetrating talk (page 270) to his apprentices on the infinite variety of sea shells, nature's housing for creatures of the sea. Here in the David Wright house the architectural application becomes more clear. We might even find a formal similarity between it and the chambered nautilus or a number of other spirally constructed shells, although to force the similarity would be to spoil the analogy and the talk itself.

Somehow, Mr. Wright seems to have discovered for himself, and in himself, this natural process of creation, this process by which nature creates an infinite number of forms to take care of an infinite number of situations—the padded paw of the tiger for stalking, the quills of the porcupine for protection, as well as the great multiplicity of shells for sea life.

This is not to say that nature is necessarily a conscious creator of forms or that forms may not derive from natural selection. Nor is it to say that Mr. Wright is completely deliberate and logical in all he does. There is an instantaneous fusion in his mind, we imagine, of the problem and the solution, of interior space and exterior form, of form, function and ornament. They are logical when analyzed but not necessarily logical in the way they were arrived at from start to finish. We do not know, frankly. The mind of a creative genius is often too fast, too charged, the things it considers, accepts or rejects, too telescoped in time, for us to say definitively how it comes to arrive at its conclusions and solutions.

But what we can say is that the solutions are always subject to analysis as if they were coldly, deliberately, common-sensically arrived at. And consequently we can say that the average architect or the average homemaker might arrive at something approaching creativity by acting consciously in a process that might be called natural; in other words, act as nature would act if its process were conscious instead of instinctive.

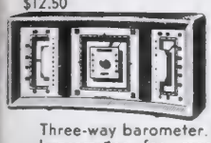
THERE is a conscious process that Mr. Wright has established and called organic architecture. We have described it a number of times already. It is specially evident here.

1. The character of the site is the beginning of architecture.

In the David Wright house the aim was to get up off the hot, dusty, desert floor, but not to separate the house from it (as putting it on stilts might have done). The solution was to spiral slowly upward from a solid base on the ground, somewhat like a path spiraling up a mountain which rises above its site but is certainly part of it. The surrounding mountains give further substance to our image. Getting up meant overlooking the nearby citrus grove, which became the lawn of the house as a result. The oval plan gives every room a wide view without encroaching upon each other's view of the desert and the mountains.

2. Let your materials sing.

Here concrete is eloquently itself: textured, bluish gray, rugged —all characteristics of the desert.



All the rooms of the David Wright house enjoy both a balcony and a full, shaded view of the desert and the surrounding mountains.

Where required it has been weatherproofed by a paint with a silicon base. In the bathroom the same blocks occur, but with the faces ground smooth. The ceilings of Philippine mahogany offer a warm brown foil to the gray masonry, and together they compose a handsome interior simply by being themselves. In time they will grow even more beautiful for such, too, is the nature of materials used naturally.

3. The reality of a house is the space within.

We have already discussed this, and rarely has it been more apparent than here. The meaning of the exterior forms can only be understood from within, and, conversely, the architectural effect of the interior space can best be seen from outside. They are, in other words, always planned completely together.

4. Expose the poetry of the structure.

One might point to various details to indicate why one considers this house so beautiful: the decorative course of concrete blocks, the patterning of the mahogany boards in the ceiling, the cantilevered master bedroom, the tower, which incidentally contains the dressing room for the pool, etc. However, this is a house which makes a simple architectural statement that you can probe endlessly for its full meaning and never exhaust: It is a concrete circle of a house with a spiraling ramp. The form is a decisive, declarative statement. So is a rock—or a tree. The ramifications and details are infinite. The poetry of the David Wright house is in the rhythm of the strong, structural form, bold and exposed.

5. There is only one law, the law of nature, and that is the law of change.

All of the principles professed by Mr. Wright are practiced with the utmost freedom. That is why they have remained principles and haven't degenerated into rules. If and when the site, the materials, the client, the climate, any one of a number of circumstances change, so will his architectural solutions change.

This has been true for the past sixty years of his practice. It is the secret of his ever-fresh designs. It is a secret he would like to share with everyone in America, architects and clients. In the meantime, he will continue to amaze all of us, year after year, with other, different houses like the one in Arizona he has just created for the family of his son David Wright.

The world's most honored architect

Not since 1908, or at least 1910, has Frank Lloyd Wright been without honor in America or in the world.

In 1908, when Mr. Wright was not yet forty, an American magazine for architects devoted an entire issue to his work. In 1910, a now famous Wasmuth edition of his buildings up to that date appeared in Germany and carried his message and influence throughout the world.

Since then, with a temporary eclipse in the 1920's and the early 1930's, Wright's stature and greatness have been universally recognized and publicly saluted.

Here is the long list of evidence:

A HOUSE IS MORE A HOME

The world has probably never seen an architect more aware of the nature and rich decorative possibilities of all building materials than Frank Lloyd Wright. In the Hollyhock House of Los Angeles (see page 262), he has applied this awareness to concrete block, using an abstract hollyhock pattern, as here in a concrete planting box of the garden wall.

Virtually all his life, Frank Lloyd Wright has been studying the reasons why things are called beautiful, and each time he has tested them against his own judgment, sometimes agreeing, often not. He has always applied his personal values. He has always wrestled from each object and each building the secret and meaning of its form.

He is clearly a man who knows what he likes and is willing to pay any price to get it. Almost all of the hundreds of thousands of dollars he received as his architectural fee for the Imperial Hotel of Tokyo was spent for Japanese or Chinese prints, screens, fabrics, lacquer, pottery, paneling and figures, which have since been incorporated, for the most part, into his homes in Wisconsin and Arizona.

And still today, he spends with the passion of the true amateur at French and Co., Chait's, Seo's, Bonniers and America House in New York; at Suie One's, Stendhal's and the Candle Shop on Olvera Street in Los Angeles, at Mori's in Chicago, at the V. C. Morris shop in San Francisco, and at every point that his eye, alive and alert for things of purchasable beauty, might chance to alight.

He has been shopping in the same high manner since early manhood, acquiring great Buddha figures for which he plans an architectural place of their own, or simply bringing home a vase, a bowl, a piece of velvet or brocade, anything he fancies, knowing that the architecture will readily accommodate anything of beauty, or, rather, anything he finds beautiful. How could it be otherwise? It is his architecture.

Similarly, if we may digress here, whatever we too bring home with us will find its proper place, if our home is ours in every way. If it reflects us and our taste (taste in the best sense, not in the sense of the mode or fashion of the moment), then it will be the proper background for objects of our free, personal choice.

Returning to Mr. Wright, perhaps it would be well at this stage to glance at the front cover and study its contents. We are looking across the living room from the dining area. We are looking past a Buddha figure, to our left, a fine one of museum quality, which has a place specially provided for it by Mr. Wright. To its left, an old, bright-patterned Japanese pot, equally fine, may be seen.

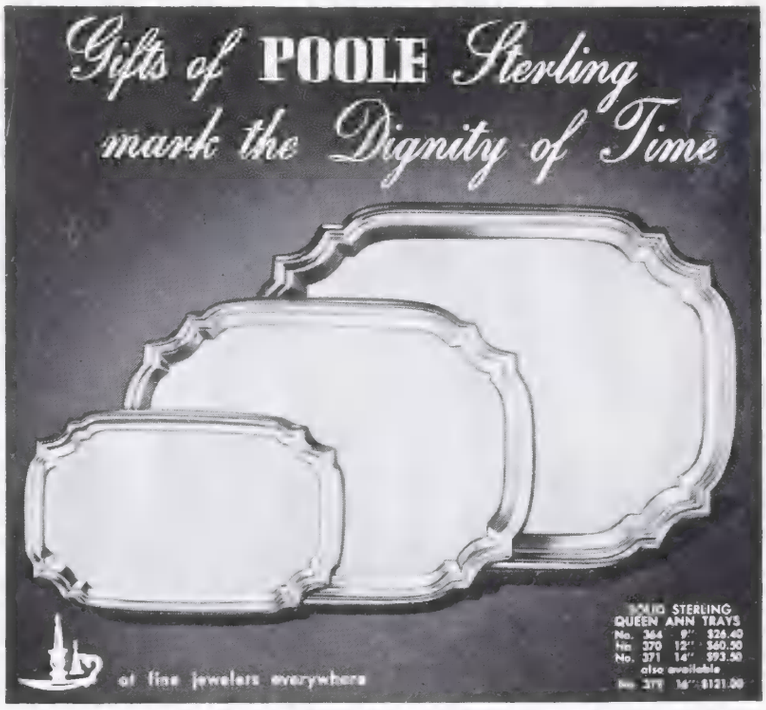
The deck along the right wall offers a high shelf for displaying other treasures—some more treasure-like than others. These arrangements, made by Mr. Wright himself, are like incidental chords of music. The red notes dominate the lighter grace notes of blue, green and white. The reds are modern Japanese soup bowls, a modern Marrell enameled plate and a wooden American tray.

The blues are priceless Chinese porcelain, an American soup bowl made by Red Wing Potteries and a modern pot. Barely discernible is an Indian basket from Arizona. There is a piece of sculpture from Wright's Midway Gardens.



They go together as if it were inevitable that they should, although they are widely separated objects in time, space and cultures. They go together because they were brought together by one who chose them with absolute confidence in his own well-exercised, well-practiced judgment. There is nothing indecisive about them or about him, and so they are in no conflict with his architecture.

And while we are studying the cover, let us note the plants and the foliage in the far corner and closer by. Let us, above all, note how warm is their welcome in this room, how naturally they are received by the stone masonry, by the view outside the window, by the living, breathing atmosphere of the architecture, of the organic architecture. All life, you feel, is welcome here, and everything is loved for itself.

PERHAPS this is Mr. Wright's secret, or, at least, one secret among many more: his love for life, his love for beauty, his love for adventure. Taliesin is testimony to all of it. Here you will find possibly the greatest private collection of Japanese prints, of Hokusai and Hiroshige certainly, perhaps of Oriental sculpture and screens, which are wedded to the walls.

But you must not suffer the mistaken notion that only the rare or the expensive are the objects of Mr. Wright's eye. It takes to modern wooden bowls and enameled ware of modest price, as well, to commercial velvets and silks, to Scandinavian pewter, and to everyday plastic cups (for their touch of color). Whatever he likes, he makes a place for, rearranging other things into new groupings.

WHAT does he look for in such widely varied things as Persian tiles, prayer rugs, pre-Ming and Beatrice Wood pottery, Coromandel screens, lacquer bowls and plastic bowls? Precisely what he looks for in wood, steel, cement, cast-iron or copper: the expression of the nature of the material and the way it is handled. He wants to feel the potterer in the pot, the mold in the cast-iron Buddha, the glaze enhancing the form of a vase, the plasticity of plastics, the grain and carving of wooden figures.

We have already discussed this preoccupation in his architecture. No surprise, then, that it should appear in everything that holds his attention. We have already discussed his feeling for nature. No wonder, then, that Taliesin is redolent of the smell of burning oak logs, enlivened by great pine boughs emerging from huge bowls, brightened by life-like arrangements of weeds and wild flowers, decorated by the snarl of bittersweet vines and pyramids of fresh fruit. "Rooms should need nothing," Mr. Wright tells his apprentices, "but when flowers are brought in, they should sing high C!"

He also inspires the apprentices at Taliesin with his own way of playing the texture and form of one object against another, of contrasting a large object with a smaller one, pitting red against blue and black. He does not lay down any rules, for there are none, but he does offer them his own example.

Arrange objects so they make little rhythms, he tells them. (We have seen what he means in our study of the arrangements on the front cover.) Whatever you find that is beautiful, buy it and show it, and show it for what you thought was beautiful: its shape, its color, its line. Remember that when two objects are brought together a third thing is created that never existed before. Think of this new thing. Each element of a group must be lovely; together they must be even lovelier.

All this advice is pertinent, of course, to all of us; as is his admonition to young architects concerning awareness:

"We took the concrete block," Mr. Wright has written of the 1921 California house above, called La Miniatura, "and made it live as a thing of beauty, textured like the trees among which it stood." Inside and out, variations of the same pattern were used to create an incredibly beautiful effect.

"Immediately begin to form the habit of thinking 'why' concerning anything or any effects that please or displease you.

"Take nothing for granted as beautiful or ugly, but take every building and object to pieces, and challenge every feature. Learn to distinguish the curious from the beautiful.

"Get the habit of analysis—analysis will in time enable synthesis to become your habit of mind.

"'Think in simples' as my old master used to say—meaning to reduce the whole to its parts in simplest terms, getting back to first principles."

THESE principles are extended, at the Taliesin Fellowship, to every object and phase of industry and handcraftsmanship, to woven goods, tapestries, table linen, cotton fabrics, table glassware, flower holders, lighting devices, stained glass windows, mosaics, jewelry, screens, fixtures, gates, fences, fire irons, enameled metals for house and garden, building hardware. Beauty is sought in all of these, as well as in flower pots, water jars and sculpture. Everything counts; everything is important in the enrichment of man's environment.

And everything, Mr. Wright insists, must be contained in contentment within the architectural structure, for it is the dominant factor in our man-made enviroment. The objects, the fabrics and the furnishings should relate in feeling, at least, to the architecture containing them. This does not mean imitation of its forms; it does mean, however, a sympathy with them, as with each other.

Integration of one with the other, and all of them with the house, means a home of harmony, peace and serenity. It means proper color co-ordination and contrast, good space and scale relationships, and a sense of the worth and value of each object, regardless of the price or the moment's fashion. The key to their use lies, generally, in the architecture: Use them so as to emphasize what is already a feature in the architecture, then they will fall into their proper place.

Rugs, draperies and furnishings, Mr. Wright admonishes, should harmonize in their design and construction with the design and construction of the particular house they occupy and embellish. A mobile, he suggests, should be composed of the design elements of the room it hangs in, adding its geometric gaiety to it. (Such is the case in both Taliesins.)

In making objects of art seem so subordinate to architecture, Mr. Wright in no way underestimates their deeper life-enhancing values. He has devoted too much of his time and energy, not to say fortune, to them for this to be true. "If Japanese prints were to be deducted from my education," he has written, "I don't know what direction the whole of my life might have taken. The gospel of elimination of the insignificant preached by the print came home to me in architecture, as it had come home to the French painters."

The Genroku embroideries, fragments of priestly robes and paisley fabrics, rich silk Chinese brocades —all seem to talk to him of beauty as he handles them, one by one, informing his mind and storing it with future patterns, appropriately inspired and appropriately applied. You sense the same thing happening when you see him stroking the oarlock of a Venetian gondola.

If the Buddha figures of stone and iron seem to be lightly treated by being used decoratively, then it is with the same profound respect for their decorativeness with which Mr. Wright regards a flower decorating a plant, a tree enhancing a field, a rock proclaiming the earth. He considers them messengers of peace and good will from the past to the present. "Their figures," he says, "seem to shed a fraternal sense of kinship from their places in the walls or from the broad ledges where they now rest."

The same feeling broods over Taliesin and is as much a part of its architecture as of its belongings. He gently suggests to us that the world is full of riches waiting for us to possess them simply by loving them—at home, of course, since love itself is most at home, at home.

"To make of a dwelling place a complete work of art, in itself as expressive and beautiful and more intimately related to life than anything of detached sculpture or painting, lending itself freely and suitably to the individual needs of the dwellers, an harmonious entity, fitting in color, pattern and nature, and in itself really an expression of them in character—this is the American opportunity . . . A higher ideal of unity, a higher and more intimate working out of the expressions of one's life in one's environment."

MOVIES and Frank Lloyd Wright

By CECILE STARR

Every facet of Frank Lloyd Wright reveals an extraordinary integrity and a gift for integration. Music is as much a part of his life as food and sleep, and although it might come as a surprise to some, so are movies.

Nothing human, no product of the human spirit and imagination, is alien to him. From them all he nourishes his own great spirit and creative expression. That, to me, is the story of Frank Lloyd Wright and films.

In 1932, Mr. Wright created the Taliesin Fellowship. Since then, groups of about 50 young men have learned about architecture under his guidance and by his example. Besides training in construction and design, in working the land and studying its resources, in all the other subjects Mr. Wright considers important, the playing of music and the enjoyment of movies also loom large in the scheme of things.

In both Taliesin, Wisconsin, and Taliesin West, in Arizona, a theater was designed to allow for self-entertainment of every possible kind—with the emphasis on active entertainment rather than passive, let us hasten to say. Every Saturday evening, after several of the boys have played some chamber music, the Fellowship schedules a full-length feature movie and an occasional short film.

FOR those film events, Mr. Wright has told us in his Autobiography, "We combed the available supply of the foreign movies in the world, as well as our native products.

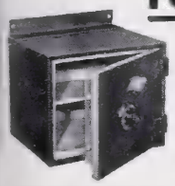
"The education I myself have received from that source alone would justify the Playhouse . . .

"An amazing additional wealth of experience and broad range of travel is stored up in me, already the much-traveled traveler, as the result of these films. It would be impossible to travel about the world and see for one's self as deeply or richly the life of the strange parts of the world as the cinema in the hands of great writers and good directors working with the historic resources of the various great nations that have gathered it can now present it."

Mr. Wright is a movie lover after my own heart.

He and the Fellowship may well hold the world record for private at-home movie showings. I estimate they have seen more than a thousand such films over the past two decades, and that does not count the many times Mr. Wright drops into a local cinema.

He obviously views movies as a modern addition to culture—not a hostile element to it. For him it is a natural part of any cultivated life, another resource for people to use in establishing their own facilities for self-entertainment in small communities.



HIS enjoyment of movies is uninhibited and complete. It clearly reflects his attitude toward life and the world around him. He needs no more justification than merely liking a movie, whether it is High Noon or Gate of Hell, Bad Day at Black Rock or The Baker's Wife.

At Taliesin in Wisconsin, both 35mm and 16mm films are shown in a specially constructed theater which Mr. Wright twinklingly refers to as the "goodtime place." It seats about 150 people, to accommodate the entire Taliesin Fellowship which consists of all the student-apprentices and their wives and children. On Saturday evenings, Mr. and Mrs. Wright and the Fellowship, and almost always some guests, dine together in a large room adjoining the theater. Dinner is served in the theater at Taliesin West in Arizona; a ledge part of the back of each seat provides a table for the row behind.

In both houses the theaters are distinctive in many ways. Instead of the conventionally curved row of seats, one notices first of all that the shape is like a carpenter's square—each row breaking into a right angle and touching the stage area at 60° and 30° angles on either side. The audience thus has an almost face-to-face relationship with itself and, at the same time, a reflex relationship to the screen. The theater declines on a steeper slant than usual, and the stage is completely recessed. The movie screen stands free like an easel, undraped and unframed, pure white and surrounded by space. This "bleeds" the projected picture to the edges of the screen and gives unusual style to the film, particularly to black-and-white movies.

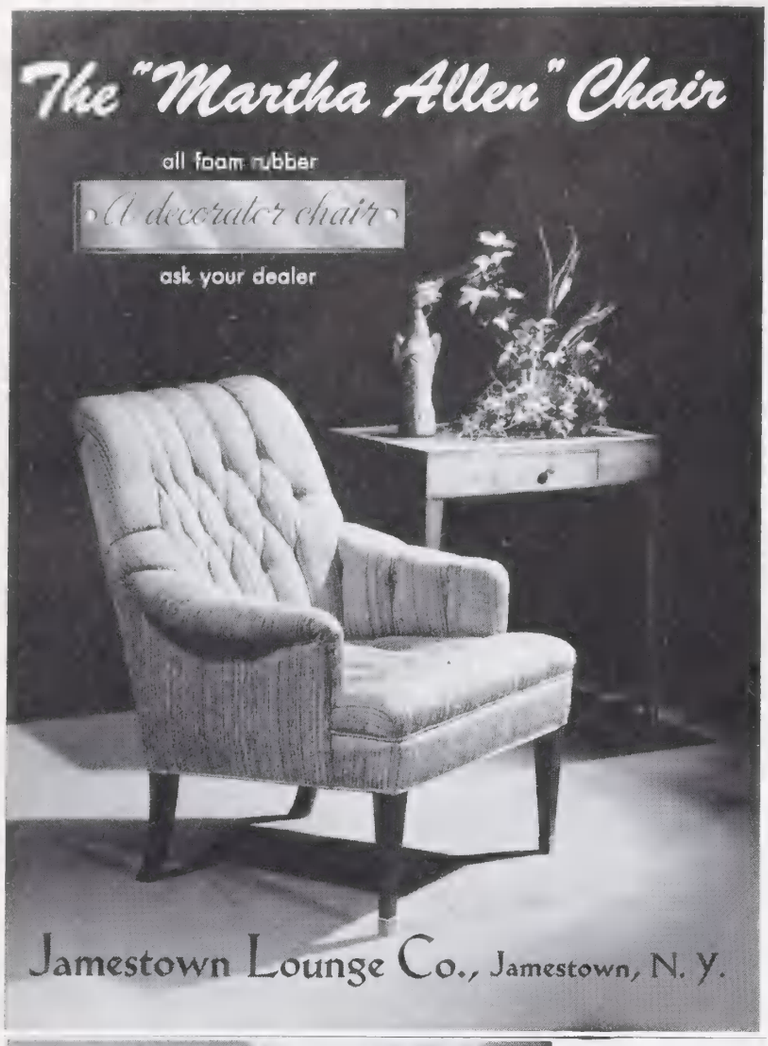
Perhaps the most unusual feature of the Taliesin showings is that the sound track, too, is projected. If you've ever held a bit of sound film up to the light, you have noticed the jagged lines which photoelectric cells convert from sound to picture and back to sound. At Taliesin this pattern of jagged lines is shown simultaneously with the picture along the left-hand side of the screen on a strip of bright red felt. Special attention has been paid also to the acoustics of the theater.

In spring and summer, open windows bring in the night noises of birds and crickets. The roof of the Arizona theater opens partially to let in the outside world. In both theaters the atmosphere is pleasant and relaxed.

FOR film fare, Frank Lloyd Wright is most interested in keeping up with "the best of the foreign films." The past season has included such a variety as this: Times Gone By (Italian), God Needs Men (French), The Little World of Don Camillo (Italian), Rashomon and Ugetzu (Japanese), Romeo and Juliet (Italian-English), Fan Fan la Tulipe (French), Gilbert and Sullivan (English), Beauties of the Night (French), Genevieve (English), and Pickwick Papers (English).

Of these films several are easily obtained for 16mm showings at home: God Needs Men and Pickwick Papers from Brandon Films, 200 West 57th Street, New York 19, N.Y.; Genevieve from United World Films, 1445 Park Avenue, New York 29, N.Y.



I was especially pleased to learn that Mr. Wright shows his favorite films over and over again year after year. This is truly the distinctive mark of one who really enjoys movies. At each viewing there is something new to be seen, something familiar to be enjoyed again. Like a superb quartet, a poem or a painting of distinction, a fine film has an astounding array of effects which make up the final vivid whole.

Nanook of the North, for example, is one of the films I have seen more than a dozen times, and each time with undiminished enjoyment and enthusiasm.

Nanook of the North is also one of Frank Lloyd Wright's favorite films; its director, the late Robert J. Flaherty, is one of his favorite film-makers. Flaherty was an explorer who found not only potential mineral deposits but also the extravagant beauty of ice, snow, wind and water. In the faces of the Eskimos he saw not only tomorrow's hunger and cold but today's great joy of living.

Nanook of the North was made in 1921 and is available now with a recently added sound track of music and narration done in excellent taste. The running time is 55 minutes. It can be rented for 16mm home showing for $25 from Athena Films, 165 West 46th Street, New York 19, N.Y. Rental prints are also available from important film libraries around the country, including Brandon and Contemporary Films, 13 East 37th Street, New York 16, N. Y.

Another Flaherty film which has been shown over and over again at Frank Lloyd Wright's screenings is Man of Aran filmed in the middle 1930's on the island off the west coast of Ireland. It is considered by many to be Flaherty's best film, a hard decision to come to since all of his films are masterpieces, acclaimed the world over.

Man of Aran is remembered for its thrilling storm sequence, the rescue of the men in the fishing boat, the boy on the cliff, the hardships of the rocky soil-less surface on which the people live, the splendid nobility of faces and forms in pursuit of life (77 minutes). Available for home rental at $25 from Contemporary Films.

TO CONCLUDE the 16mm round-up of Flaherty films, you can add Louisiana Story (77 minutes) filmed in 1948 in the bayou country. There is irresistible beauty in the scenes of birds, animals and trees of the swampland. (Every extreme of geographical countenance has been recorded by the Flaherty camera it seems.) But there is also the wonderful story of modern machinery and oil as seen by the fascinated eyes of the Cajun boy, Alexander. Virgil Thompson's musical score is ringingly good-humored. Rentals of Louisiana Story are available at $25 for home use from Contemporary.

The French director René Clair, noted for his touch with farce and comedy, is another of Frank Lloyd Wright's consistent favorites. The Ghost Goes West (80 minutes) was his first English-language production, made in Britain in 1936. Starring Robert Donat and Jean Parker in a screen play written by Robert Sherwood, the film abounds in Clair's favorite tricks. It's mostly a matter of a kilted ghost, his appearances and disappearances, and of the castle he habitually haunts which is purchased and moved from Scotland to America.

The Ghost Goes West is listed at $17.50 rental from many 16mm distributors including Brandon and Contemporary.

ANOTHER world-famous film comedy of the year 1936 is Jacques Feyder's Carnival in Flanders (La Kermesse Heroique). Starring France's great Louis Jouvet and Françoise Rosay, the film is an urbane re-enactment of history—the kind that does not generally get its fair share in textbooks. The time: Seventeenth Century; the subject: the invasion of Flanders by Spanish armies.

Vivid costumes and sets accent the wit and sparkle of a war that took place not between the two nations, but between the two sexes. Dialogue is in French with English subtitles. Rental prints (16 mm) are available at $25 (home-user's rate) from Brandon Films.

The 1930's saw the achievement of new heights in French films with Jean Renoir's Grand Illusion high on Mr. Wright's list. Its brilliant dialogue and camera direction highlight the superb performances of Jean Gabin and Pierre Fresnay as French officers, and Eric von Stroheim as a Prussian militarist. The time is late in World War I; the scene (during most of the film) a German prison camp. Dialogue is in English, German and French—mostly the latter—and subtitles.

Grand Illusion is available at $17.50 (for home use only) from Brandon and Contemporary.

This selection of films shown frequently by Frank Lloyd Wright concludes with a brief reminder of a wonderful comedy starring Marlene Dietrich, Destry Rides Again (82 minutes). Produced in 1939 and directed by George Marshall, it presents an exciting picture of the wicked West with James Stewart as the Sheriff, and Dietrich huskily reciting about the boys in the backroom and a guy named Little Joe. It is available for 16mm rental at $20 from Contemporary Films, 13 East 37th Street, New York 16, N. Y.

No wonder, then, that they were turning with such enthusiasm to the labor-saving, comfort-making devices which American factories were turning out in the decade Frank Lloyd Wright began to work.

Consider what the "store-bought" products of American factories accomplished for the American home in the decades between the Civil War and 1900.

Sanitary conditions were revolutionized. Municipal water banished the well and cistern. Sewers and septic tanks eliminated the privy. Plumbing brought hot and cold running water into the kitchen and bath. Washing machines, first hand-operated then electrically-powered, cut the drudgery of the family wash to a fraction and eliminated washpots, tubs and benches from the back yard. (The clothesline hung on for a few more decades, awaiting the dryer.) And, of course, the commercial laundry was removing the family wash from many a housewife's troubled dreams forever.

Central heating appeared: stoves and fireplaces, with their daily clutter of kindling, fuel and ashes disappeared. The unsightly wood pile in the yard gave way to basement coal bin or buried oil tank; the mechanical stoker and thermostat soon took over all the responsibility for keeping the fires going.

First gas, then electricity, entered the kitchen range. Quick, clean, relatively cool cooking was possible for the first time in history: ashes, coal scuttle, wood box and soot were all banished.

Municipal garbage collection eliminated trash pile and garbage pit.

Butcher shop and dairy replaced domestic animals and with them the heavy labor of milking, churning, butchering, lard-rendering, etc. And with the cow, pig and poultry went some of the most unattractive features of the domestic landscape—cow barn, pig pen, chicken run—with their flies and odors.

The food industry, first with canning, then refrigeration, took the processing of fruits and vegetables out of the kitchen. Another constellation of utilities disappeared: root cellar, ice house, pantry and vegetable garden.

The automobile replaced the horse and buggy and gone with Dobbin were stalls, pasture, hay-barn and manure pile.

What all this amounted to, in plain English, was that for the first time in history the squalid, never-ending drudgery of housekeeping had been lifted from the average housewife's shoulders. The most degrading and stultifying processes of family sustenance had been mechanized either in the factory or at home. The housewife was able, suddenly, to join the human race, to enjoy that comfort, leisure and self-respect which had hitherto been the prerogative of rich, slave- or servant-attended women.

BUT there was another—and for architects even more important —side to this coin. The same process which had removed from the house the causes of hard labor, inconvenience and discomfort had also removed the causes of most of its ugliness. For the first time in history, the home of the average family could be a thing of beauty. Not just the parlor or the front yard but all of it, inside and out, could be an object of pleasure and delight.

This new kind of family required a totally new kind of house. And we can say without fear of contradiction that Wright was the first American architect fully to comprehend this new fact, fully to exploit its exciting possibilities.

It would be nonsense, of course, to claim that Wright, in those early days of the new American house, was the only or even the first architect to use central heating, plumbing, washing machines and the like. His contemporaries used all these new things enthusiastically, but they tried to graft them onto the old, conventional designs. They used steam radiators but masked them behind Renaissance grilles; steel columns and beams, but sheathed them to look like wood or marble; modern plumbing fixtures, but paneled them to look like bishop's chairs.

No. Mr. Wright's role was of quite another order. He saw that all these developments, taken together, demanded nothing less than a totally new system of architectural expression. The old, traditional forms simply could not contain the new reality; a new kind of beauty was called for. The same science and technology which had wrought such changes in the life of the housewife had also given the architect a whole new palette of building materials: structural steel, reinforced concrete, plywood, huge sheets of rolled plate glass. And Frank Lloyd Wright—almost alone it was Wright, in those early days after the retirement of his lieber meister, Louis Sullivan—argued that these should be employed boldly, honestly, and not tortured into traditional forms.

As a result of this independent approach, Wright was able to make very important architectural contributions to design, many of which have become standard elements in the modern house. He included all of these in the Exhibition House shown on page 262.

Central Heating and the Open Plan

By 1900, everybody who could afford it demanded central heating—either hot air furnaces or steam heat. All architects were quick to include it in their new houses, but only Mr. Wright saw its ultimate implications. It made obsolete the old honeycomb plan of boxy, airtight rooms strung like beads on a necklace. This had been logical in cold climates so long as fireplaces and stoves were the only way of heating each room. But Wright was quick to see that if all rooms could be kept equally comfortable with almost invisible heat sources, rooms could flow freely into one another. A new kind of freedom was possible in this plan. (Now called the open plan.) Doors and whole walls could be eliminated, rooms could dissolve into one another. The open plan was the instrument which enabled Wright to create those splendid interior vistas for which his houses are justly famous.

Glass and the indoor-outdoor relationship

By 1900, everyone was aware of the therapeutic value of sunshine and demanded more of it in houses. Plate and rolled glass made possible windows of unprecedented size. While other architects used more glass, they used it in conventional patterns, cutting up their sashes into little Colonial rectangles, Elizabethan diamonds or leaded Medieval bull's-eyes. Only Mr. Wright saw the dramatic possibilities of these huge transparent sheets and he used them to destroy the iron boundary between indoor and out. Here was another instrument of great power and beauty at his disposal; with it he could extend the living area to include not merely the enclosed area, but the terraces, porches and garden beyond. He thereby brought his interior space into a new and exciting proximity with nature.

Electricity and the new illumination

By 1900, everyone was demanding electric lighting in their houses. Its advantages over oil lamps and gas were obvious and immense. But electricity was not merely a substitute for kerosene or coal gas, it made possible a totally new concept of illumination. Instead of the niggardly pinpoints of historic light sources, electricity made it possible to flood whole areas with light. Spaces could be modeled, forms dramatized, textures enhanced. Who besides Wright, in those early days, understood this? While the rest of the profession continued to mask their Mazda bulbs in fixtures of conventional form—candelabrum, chandelier and sconce—Wright went boldly ahead building the unadorned bulb into the very fabric of his house. Light itself, and not just the fixture, became a source of pleasure and delight.

These are just three examples of Wright's electrifying touch, of his ability to transmute simple technological developments into new esthetic experiences. And if we turn to the more prosaic aspects of his houses, we see the same great talent at work. Take, as an instance, his kitchens. A whole series of developments had revolutionized this area and he was by no means the only man to see this. New ranges, sinks, dishwashers, refrigerators, cupboards and counter spaces were being used more and more.

But the same forces which had removed the ugly chores from the kitchen had also removed the servants. The cook, who had formerly canned peaches in the kitchen, was now canning them at higher wages and shorter hours in the factory. This meant that more housewives than ever would have to work in the kitchen. And this implied in turn that the kitchen must be not only labor-saving and convenient, it must also be as pleasant esthetically as the living room.

Moreover, if the wife was to spend a good part of her working day there, she could not be isolated, exiled from the rest of the family. Mr. Wright grasped this fact decades before his colleagues: the steps he took to destroy the separation, psychic as well as physical, of the kitchen from the house have had a profound and benign effect upon the new American house.

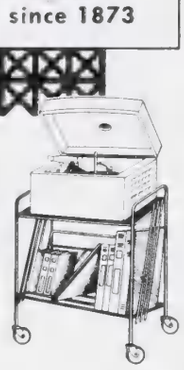
In the catalogue for his Exhibition House, Mr. Wright says wryly that he would be accused of arrogance if he claimed that his early houses were "the first truly democratic expression of our democracy." Yet a distinguishing mark of his houses had from the start been their modesty. Even large and expensive ones, like the Coonley house (page 272) or the Kaufmann house (page 246) lack that brow-beating pretentiousness which was the trade-mark of the great house, at least until the Depression.



BIG or small, Wright's houses have the grace and urbanity of the mansion, yet this is never the result of just shrinking the mansion down to cottage size as the Amazon headhunter does his trophies.

Many of his contemporaries tried that, but not Wright. Even his own house at Taliesen (page 235), actually one of the largest country houses in America, is so fitted into its terrain that its real size is never apparent—is, on the contrary, deliberately concealed. There are impressive, even majestic, vistas in these houses, but they are designed to delight the inhabitants, not to overawe the passerby.

All elements of a house were, to Wright, equally important and hence equally beautiful. It had no "front" and consequently could have no "back"; thereby he dealt a mortal blow to the hypocrisy of the Victorian house with its "Queen Anne front and Mary Anne back."

Wright's houses were also democratic from the start in the sense of materials. Cost or rarity of a material has never been for him an argument either for or against it. He could create interiors of magnificent warmth, of skin-stroking luxury, with the simplest materials—wood, brick, plaster—while his contemporaries were using imported marbles, cut velvets and gold leaf with much less effect. How could this be? Mr. Wright said it was because they had no real feeling for the nature of their materials. They cut, carved, chiseled, clipped, painted and plastered and stenciled. He, on the contrary, let each material speak clearly for itself. The result was a sense of repose, of blessed ease and calm space, quite unprecedented in American architecture.

All this is history now. Whole generations of Americans have matured under Frank Lloyd Wright's influence without ever realizing it. That is why his houses seem so strangely familiar today. But that does not explain why they strike us still as modern, contemporary, up-to-date—even, in some circles, still controversial. How can forms already over a half a century old still have this power to excite us? One might as well ask the same question of Cézanne or Van Gogh. They were created half a century or more ago, yet they, too, strike us as marvels of contemporaneity. The answer can only be that, like all great artists, these men created the vision of their times. We see the world through their eyes and we accept their vision because it corresponds so closely to our most pressing hopes and deepest needs. And they will remain our contemporaries until we, ourselves, change.

Frank Lloyd Wright

Wright was one of the pioneers of built-in furniture—especially storage units of all sorts: shelving, wardrobes, drawers, etc. In this master bedroom of the 1953 Exhibition House, you see the same thing, by now a standard practice in American homes. For Wright it increased livability and insured good architectural interiors.

Wright long ago stripped the bed of all its accumulated bric-a-brac of head- and footboards, canopies and testers, feeling that these were relics of the draughty, ill-heated houses of the past. The beds in the Exhibition House consist simply of foam-rubber mattress and springs mounted on bold plywood frames to match rest of furniture.

Wright was one of our first architects to use radiant-heated concrete floor slabs in his houses—a technique which freed his floors of radiators and registers. To offset their hardness, he sometimes uses lush areas of carpeting: in this case, with an underlayment of waffle-like rubber matting as shown in photograph above.

tion to modern industry, nor in its social aspects is it functional in relation to abstract social theory. But it is functional technically, socially and economically in terms of human living and of man's spirituality.

The organic movement is conscious of the inherent differences between robots and human beings. It recognizes that if man has a soul and a free will, the problem of architecture will be one of quality, not only of quantity, that people are not file cards to be housed in boxes and that to define habitations as "machines for living" is ridiculous, if not criminal.

IS THE quest of the organic movement therefore a romantic one? I do not think so, even though it includes irrational impulses among its aims. For the notion of science as the unique, immutable explanation of unrelated phenomena has been vanquished, and the scientific spirit now projects its light on the whole field of human psychology. The irrational world is studied, liberated and expressed through scientific knowledge and methods. In this quest, Wright's works represent a fundamental intuition, a guide, a direction.

Look at the Warren Hickox house at Kankakee, Illinois, dated 1900, or the Bradley house of the same year, or those first masterpieces like the Willitts house or the well-known Robie house in Chicago, of 1909; then skip to 1931, to the House on the Mesa: to the Willey house in Minneapolis (1934) which could be called the first of the Usonians. Study the plans of Falling Water of 1936 or Taliesin West of 1938 or, finally, the Guggenheim Museum.

Everywhere the same tendency is apparent: to amalgamate the rooms; to animate the building as if it were a continuous spatial discourse rather than a series of separate words; to break with geometry —often even with the right angle— for the sake of forms more adequate for human use and movement; above all, to feel interior space as a reality, as the substantive, pulsating reality of architecture—that reality which, through the artist's intuition, expresses and transforms all practical requirements. Apart from problems of taste in regard to volume and decoration, which are perhaps debatable, this is the true meaning of Wright's work.

THE SPACE WITHIN

The concept of continuous space cannot actually be experienced without visiting a Wright building. Works whose esthetic has been concentrated in their decorative patterns, and especially works in which the solution of problems of volume predominates, can be illustrated photographically.

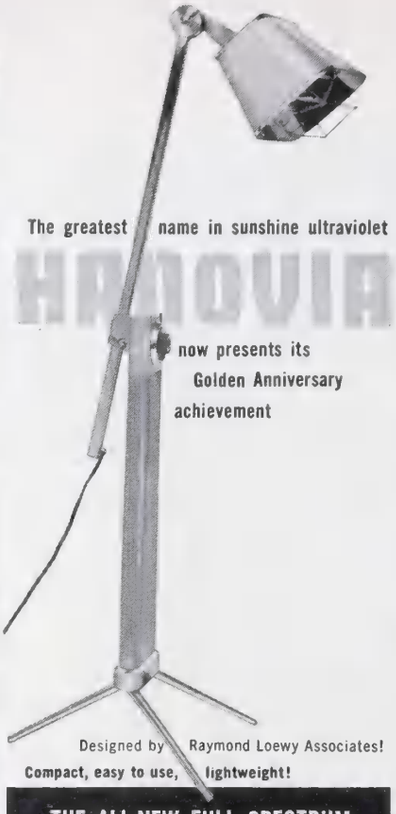
But Wright's architecture, where the entire secret lies in the powerful vitality of the interior space, of the voids, is incomprehensible unless one walks through those spaces, free to be influenced by the atmosphere, the vivacity of multiple indications of scale and the repose emanating from those vast concepts which Wright employs even in his most economical architectural themes.

Views of Wright's interiors show that his spatial freedom is not expressed in plan alone but also in elevation. The soffits [under surfaces of any architectural feature] of his houses are frequently the dialectic crown of a spatial drama, just as the exteriors are the projections of the interior space. In contrast, flat white soffits and habitable boxes seem either to be the result of building based on speculation, and hence incapable of giving form to an individual expression, or else the consequence of a great poverty of invention and formal vocabulary.

After its dissemination through Le Corbusier's propaganda and his excellent examples, the free or open plan became a sort of captive of modern architecture, even a cliché. As with every mannerism, its meaning was finally lost, together with the reason and purpose of its discovery. The free plan as generally used is certainly a step ahead of the traditional cubicles, but it has no visible connection with the free plan as used by Wright, which is not an initial formula but results from the concept of continuous space.

THE most difficult thing in architectural criticism is to see, to feel, to know how to relive and judge spaces. Thus, much criticism has confined itself to judging Wright's work merely from a plastic point of view and has continued to play around with solids and spaces, with relationships of mass in projections and recesses, with stylistic preferences, without regard to the words of Wright himself, who is perhaps the worst propagandist of his own work, despite the fact that he is a brilliant and stimulating writer, speaker and conversationalist.

Seen in this way from outside, as if one were judging sculpture or a sketch, Wright's architecture cannot be understood. It has been defined as romantic, naturalistic and arbitrary by those who have not perceived that, in so far as an artist has any consistency or any rule, there is a rule in Wright, but it is applied not to the volume or the decoration but to the interior space.



IN DEFINING Wright's architecture as organic, we mean essentially two things: First, that his buildings are entities like living organisms, and second, that they are functional in relation to mankind.

Old esthetics enumerate many criteria for beauty in architecture—symmetry, rhythm, proportion, equilibrium or balance, scale—but all agree on one fundamental unity. These outmoded esthetics with their primary interest in façades, were content to seek unity in decoration and two-dimensional composition. Then a step forward was taken, and architectural esthetics recognized and required the unity of volume.

Particularly when faced with modern buildings, devoid of decoration, this critique of volume developed; that is, the unity of a building was sought not only from the standpoint presented by a single perspective view but in the entire body of the building and its wall structure. But an organism and the critique suited to it were still lacking.

In a human organism there is an intrinsic correspondence between internal constitution and outward appearance, between muscles, nerves, skeleton, circulatory system and skin. When functionalism stripped buildings bare, criticism no longer concerned itself with cloaks and furbelows but with the body of the edifice; people began to see that unity in architecture means the unity of interior spaces from whence springs the unity of volume in a house conceived in terms of walls enclosing this space and its continuation in the decorative treatment of the surfaces of the walls.

A Wright house is an organism in that its fundamental and substantive theme is space, the volumetric enclosure is the projection of this space, and the decorative patterns, the choice of materials and ornamentation, are designed to give value and accent to the spatial concept which is always basic.

No one but a maniac with hallucinations could in one lifetime have created the Prairie houses, Falling Water and the Guggenheim Museum, if these were considered from the exterior as plastic phenomena. Instead, they are the results of a method of spatial creation applied to diverse themes under different conditions. In the light of this spatial interpretation. Wright's architecture, seemingly so manifold and arbitrary, is more coherent than that of any of the functionalists who betray the real problems of architecture with a coherence that is entirely formal and extraneous.

The vitality of Wright's structure, the power of his buildings, his unbelievable technical daring, the permanent fecundity of his genius, are explicable in the light of this conception of a building as a living reality, growing and organic.

This man, who built functional buildings before the birth of functionalism, has nevertheless always refused to accept the utilitarian and technological descriptions of functionalism as they were formulated in Europe. On that continent functionalism had the merit of awakening architecture from its nineteenth-century slumbers and bringing it into contact with the actualities of the industrial era and the collective elements of modern society.

It posed the problem of adherence to the technique and purpose of the building. If other requirements of a formal nature were added, this was after the researches of such movements in modern painting as purism, constructivism, neo-plasticism and other derivatives of cubism.

Such additions were never thoroughly integrated with architectonic vision, and so even today the majority of modern architects base themselves on technological and utilitarian theories, knowing that these are neither inflexible nor complete, and solve their other problems as suits their taste. But technique plus utility plus taste propound all over again the traditional trinity of architecture, leaving unsolved the problem of cultural integration.

WRIGHT is called romantic by those who prefer the easy scheme of a trinity which is only seemingly clear, by those who do not wish to subject themselves to the far vaster complications of contemporary architectonic culture. They prefer to talk of standardization, statistics and formulae—all things which seem precise but are infinitely vague—and to avoid the central problem of architecture posited by Wright. This is the problem of social man, for whom buildings are built—man integrated and alive, not the cadaver vivisected into the intuitive man, the logical man and the economic man. It is the total problem of culture in which art, science and religion, to use Wright's words, find an organic synthesis.

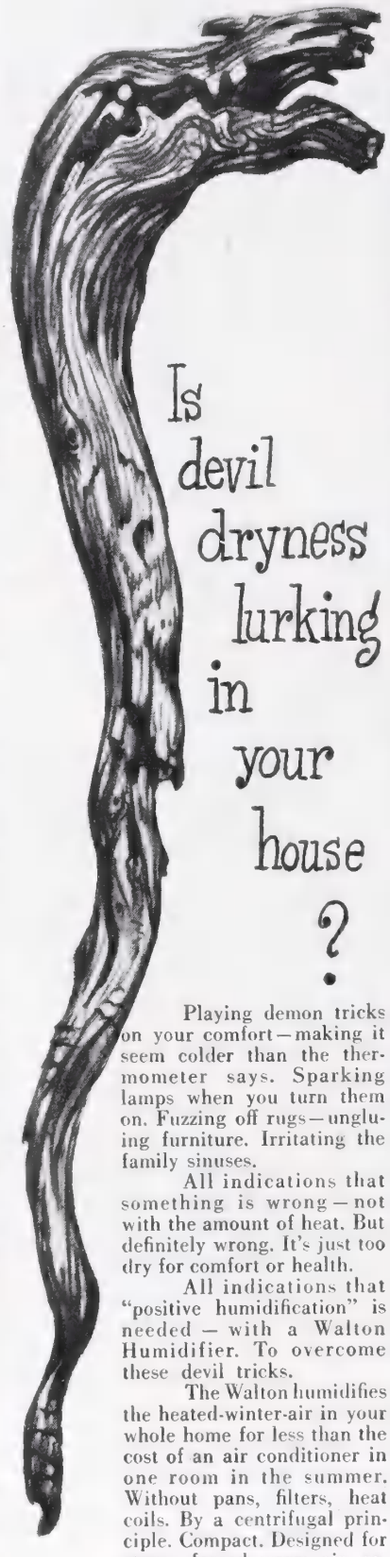
The statement that there is no opposition between functionalism and the organic movement, but only the development of the second from the first, is also historically accurate. The organic architecture of Wright, it is true, stated its case before European functionalism, but this was possible because functionalism was born in America long before it was in Europe, finding its cultural center in the Chicago School of 1880-90. (Witness, besides Burling and Adler, Burnham and Root, Martin Roche, W. A. Holabird and John Edelman and the prophet of modern architecture, Louis H. Sullivan.)

In Europe functionalism arose later, more completely and extensively, as an international movement, and it is understandable that only now is the organic movement being born on an international plane; hence only now can Frank Lloyd Wright be understood, not as an esoteric genius, but as an initiator of a movement in which one finds Aalto and the Swedes, the English city planners and the young Italian architects and critics like Carlo L. Ragghianti and Giulio C. Argan.

TWO facts, seemingly contradictory, exist today: social collectivism arising from the industrial revolution and from the arrival of the masses on the political scene, and individualism, which refuses to abandon the illuminating liberal conquests of the past centuries.



In architecture, too, the field is divided. On the one hand are the pure functionalists, entirely dedicated (at least in theory) to resolving quantitative problems of technique and utility based on numbers and charts; on the other, the nostalgic traditionalists who recall the creative thrill that came from bastardizing a "darling little" Renaissance capital or from crowning an eighteenth-century window with a "sweet little" Baroque pediment. They share one thing—their aversion to Wright: the former because he is too individualistic, the latter because he is too modern.

Between these two permanen opposed groups a son was born functionalism—the modern mo ment. This movement no lon needs to hate the traditionalists a the monumentalitarians, both ready buried so far as cultural s nificance is concerned by the p vious generation; thus it can ev listen more benevolently to profound reasonableness hid beneath the absurd and a historical position of conservati The problems are, in fact, cons erably more complicated and m varied than the technologists e mated.

MODERN architecture must s isfy not only social requi ments but also those of the hum personality; both the masses a the individual make demands garding the appearance of the to and of the home. Underlined by disasters of war and destituti there arises a new need for spiri ality or, as some say, for religi and in the light of this n materialist functionalism even e bellished with formal lyricis seems inhuman and insufficient

The complex of human deman material, psychological and spi tual, poses for organic architect and its culture the problem of in gration. That is why the orga architecture of Frank Lloyd Wrig his moral appeal, his spatial c quests, seem today, against horizon of contemporary efforts, only the seal of greatness of architect but almost the marker a road to be traveled with co dence and of a work to be pro cuted with passion and belief.

(This slightly edited article Bruno Zevi was translated by Edg Kaufman, Jr. from Mr. Zevi's int duction to Architetti del Movimen Moderno, Vol. III: Frank Llo Wright, Milan, Il Balcone, 1947. new edition appeared in 1954.)

Frank Lloyd Wright

What men have written about Frank Lloyd Wright

"Prophetically enough." Bernard Karpel says in the introduction to his bibliography on writings about Frank Lloyd Wright, "the earliest significant association of the architect in the company of print occurred in THE HOUSE BEAUTIFUL, in a setting designed by Frank Lloyd Wright, issued in 1897, with text by William C. Gannett.

In the fifty-eight years since then, the flow of print by and about Mr. Wright, if not of flood proportions, has been, at least, considerable. A bibliography of what men have written about him, specially prepared and annotated by Mr. Karpel for HOUSE BEAUTIFUL MAGAZINE, reveals remarkably well his influence and recognition, both here and abroad.

Out of a total of 328 references, we have selected 38, which indicate the scope and depth of his impact on the public as well as on the professional. They are arranged chronologically by decade, in books and periodicals:

1900—1919

Spencer, Robert C., Jr., "The Work of Frank Lloyd Wright." Architectural Review, Boston, May 1900.

Construction of the '90's, seen as "a poetic translation of material into structure."

The Work of Frank Lloyd Wright: Its Influence." Architectural Record, July 1905.

Schuyler, Montgomery, "An Architectural Pioneer," Architectural Record, April 1912.

"Review of the portfolios containing the works of Wright."

On the gardens at the old World's Fair Midway: "Three arts . . . determined by the same mind."

Wright, Frank Lloyd. Ausgefuhrte Bauten und Entwurfe. Wasmuth, Berlin, 1910.

Two portfolios of plates and text; introduction by the architect. "His sketches and executed work published in Berlin 1912, in a huge folio volume, illustrated with masterly drawings, are a distinguished contribution to the bibliography of architecture. This book, printed in German, has had a powerful and easily discernible effect on the modern architecture of northern Europe . . . We have here the first turning of the tide, the first evidence of that ever-increasing flow of architectural influence no longer from Europe to America, but now from America to Europe." (Tallmadge, Thomas E., The Story of Architecture in America. Reprinted 1924.)

Berlage, Hendrik P., Amerikanische Reisherinneringen, Brusse, Rotterdam, 1913.

Wright is "a master without an equal in Europe."

1920—1929

Floto, Julius, "Imperial Hotel, Tokyo, Japan." Architectural Record, February 1924.

A report by a structural engineer on a "symbol . . . to man's power in combatting the elements . . . a single thought tenaciously held by . . . a prophet, a craftsman, a master builder."

"Wright, the most important of radical architects in the world today: the rebel and the bête noire to all the comfortably conservative. Beaux-Arts-influenced, organized professionals in America, and something of a god to youthful Germany, youthful Japan, to Holland, to Russia—even to a few in his own America."

"It is youth in America which has discovered to what extent and for how long Wright has insisted upon the living present against the dead past."

"[Wright] introduced many innovations, particularly in domestic building . . . His open planning broke the mould of the traditional house, to which Europe clung down to the war."

Chapter 14: "An American Architect." "No architect, past or present, has surpassed him in individuality . . . Wright has not created the American Style, but certainly he has created a style of his own, and as certainly a distinctively American form . . ."

McGrath, Raymond. Twentieth Century Houses. Faber and Faber, London, 1934.

"Before 1900 he . . . had given a completely new feeling to the planning of middle-sized houses in the middle West . . . space in plan designs, a reasoned use of materials and a clean use of ornament."

Woollcott, Alexander. While Rome Burns, Viking, New York, 1934.

"Frank Lloyd Wright's work is the first creation in the realm of architecture that can be regarded as an independent creation of the American spirit."

PLANNING A NEW HOME?

Let this MODERN Electrical Protection end forever the nuisance of blown fuses

In planning your new home (or when modernizing the wiring of an old home) be sure YOU include a Cutler-Hammer Unit Breaker. So simple and so safe a child can do it.

The Cutler-Hammer Unit Breaker is so good looking you need not hide it. Put it in your kitchen or wherever it will be most convenient. Have your new wiring figured two ways, with fuses and with a C-H Unit Breaker. You'll be amazed at the slight difference in cost. Write now for free booklet.

Influence Abroad." Parnassus, December 1940.

"If America in the twentieth century is no longer architecturally in debt to Europe, the credit is predominantly due to one man and to one man alone, Frank Lloyd Wright . . . a man who in his own formation owes little or nothing to Europe, beyond his debt to a few writers or musicians."

Gutheim, F. A., "First Reckon with His Future; exhibit at the Modern Museum. Magazine of Art, January 1941.

"Critics have said for years, and are still saying, that Wright's career was uniquely important, and in the same breath crying down the fact that it is still important and will continue to be important . . . He who would analyze his past had better first reckon with his future."

Van Der Rohe, Mies, "Tribute to Wright," College Art Journal, no. 1, 1946. Italian version in Emporium (March 1948).

"Frank Lloyd Wright," Architectural Forum, January 1948.

"Frank Lloyd Wright is designing (and this is much more our tragedy than his) not for life as it is in our own perilous time, but for life as it can and someday will be . . . We like to think that the next best thing to building Wright is publishing him and proudly present this issue completely devoted to his work, on the anniversary of our original Frank Lloyd Wright issue of 1938. Like the first one, this issue was completely designed and written by him."

Churchill, Henry S., "Notes on Frank Lloyd Wright." Magazine of Art, February 1948.

"He walks in the mantle of Jeffersonian democracy, he echoes the romanticism of Brahms and Hugo, of Whitman and Melville."

Hamlin, Talbot, Architecture through the Ages, Putnam's, New York, 1940.

"Wright, more than any architect of the time, realized the deep changes that were going on in family life."

Ford, James, and Morrow, Katherine, The Modern House in America, Architectural Book, New York, 1940.

"Acknowledged originator of the revolt from the traditional . . . [Wright's] influence . . . was more marked in Europe than America in the first three decades of this century."

Zevi, Bruno, Towards an Organic Architecture, Faber & Faber, London, 1950.

"This [organic] tendency . . . is stronger in America than elsewhere for historic reasons . . . and because of the presence of a genius, Frank Lloyd Wright." Translated from the Italian edition (1945).

1950—1955

Kaufmann, Edgar, Jr., "Frank Lloyd Wright at the Strozzi." Magazine of Art, May 1951.

"The exhibition . . . resembles a whirlpool drawing together fragments of civilization and history in irresistible homage to human creativity in art . . . The rebel Wright, we can see now, has never rebelled except against what he believed to be inhuman and unproductive."

Commager, Henry S., The American Mind, An Interpretation of American Thought and Character Since the 1880's, Yale University Press, New Haven, 1950.

Chapter XIX: "Architecture and Society" . . . "[Wright] was the first major architect since the days of the early Republic to consider the house as a whole, fit it into the ground, blend it into its environment, harmonize style, materials, and furnishings, let in light and air, exploit the findings of technology for plumbing and heating. He was the first, too, to use freely all the resources of modern construction—glass, steel, copper, plastics, tile—and to apply these to interiors and to furnishings. And to building after building, for a period of over forty years, he triumphantly applied the principle of functionalism, the technics of engineering, the materials of science, with imagination and audacity."

Mumford, Lewis, Roots of Contemporary Architecture, Reinhold, New York, 1952.

37 essays from mid-19th to 20th century; biographies of the writers. "By general consent [F. L. Wright is] the most original and creative architect of the last century. For sheer fertility and abundance of designs, he is without rival, perhaps, among architects of any time or place."

Untermeyer, Louis, Makers of the Modern World, Simon and Schuster, New York, 1955. (Chapter on Frank Lloyd Wright.)

have us pegged for a Swede, is self-taught out of that splendid $2.50 book by the Berlitz School of Languages. They publish similar books for French, German, Spanish, Russian, Portuguese, Modern Hebrew, and—a switch—English for Spanish-speakers. This book, we must point out, makes no pretense of being a substitute for one of the Berlitz teacher-conducted language courses that are available all around the world in the something like 350 Berlitz schools that teach as many as 60 different languages. But the book served us so brilliantly, Swede or no Swede, that we keep giving copies of it away to people who are heading for Italy, and it seems to help them just fine.

Any shortcomings in our performance we feel are owing to our failure to practice, for the whole crux of this self-teaching method is the amount of time you give to reading aloud from the phonetically written text, thus familiarizing yourself with both the sight and sound of the written word. Within six months, we are told, Berlitz is going to present a new kind of language course on phonograph records.

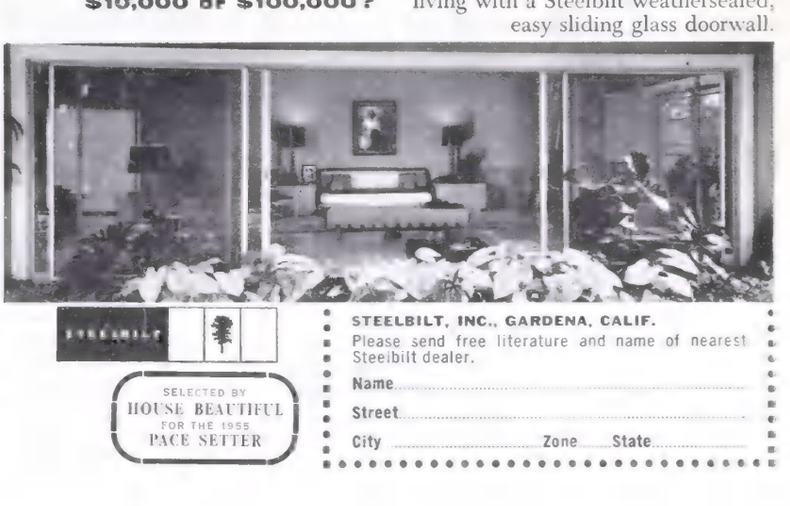
TO DATE, we have investigated two phonograph record courses, one by Linguaphone Institute and another by the publishers, Henry Holt and Company. These work on the principle that you learn by listening, which is indeed how you learned your mother tongue and is also what happens to those people who "pick up" a language on its native heath. Both have been very successful in teaching military and diplomatic personnel, missionaries, etc., and both are used in college to supplement classroom teaching. The emphasis is on the spoken language instead of on the written. You learn by constant repetition of what you hear on the records. And the fine part of this is that the language is spoken by natives in the living modern vernacular. None of that "Postilion, stop the horses! Our coach has been struck by lightning" stuff so often found in phrase books. The theory is that if you want to go literary at a later date this practical groundwork makes declensions and conjugations come easy as a breeze.

The Linguaphone Conversational Courses are prepared by a distinguished board of linguists for 32 languages and can give you a working vocabulary of about 3,000 words in each of the 18 most commonly used languages. The claim is that after the course you can even speak with sang-froid to a foreign banker! There is also a set of Oriental and African tongues and even classical Greek and Latin. (We are intrigued by the fact that those going into the bush can learn not only Swahili but Efik, Hausa and Luganda, three languages we never knew existed until we read the Linguaphone brochures.)

Generally, for the most commonly needed languages, the course consists of 16 double-sided 78 rpm records which can be played on any standard phonograph. (French, German and American-Spanish also come on 45 rpm records.) With these come an illustrated book to which you refer as you listen, a textbook and a carrying case for the records. Price is about $60. For more precise information: Linguaphone Institute, 30 Rockefeller Plaza, New York 20.

The Holt Spoken Language Courses have their foundation in the specially designed language courses that the American Council of Learned Societies and the Linguistic Society worked up for accelerating the teaching of languages to soldiers, sailors and members of the State Department. There are 21 languages. And, according to those who have done it, if you really concentrate on your listening and mimicking and give your course, say, 200 hours of "contact," you can be chattering on like a native in five weeks or less. These courses usually consist of 24 double-sided vinyl records, plus a guide book to explain the records and a self-testing answer book. All records are 78 rpm but lately, French, Spanish, Italian, Russian and German have been recorded in 33⅓ rpm long-playing records. Cost is about $50.

ALSO, for the benefit of those in a particularly great hurry, there is a series of 10" "quickie" records which give you the linguistic wherewithal for getting around in the most popular languages. They furnish you with a vocabulary of about 200 words, cost about $3. For more about both types of courses: Henry Holt and Company, 383 Madison Ave., New York 10.



From all we can gather, the most popular languages are French and Spanish, but in the last few years, German, Danish, Turkish and Hindustani have been forging ahead. Wonder what this means!

The push to S. A.

There's now a big movement in the travel industry to introduce more North Americans to South America by making the fascinating countries to the south more accessible, financially, we hope, as well as physically.

Word has reached us belatedly (you can't go; it's all over!) of a ten-day Good Will Tour from Washington, D. C. to Rio de Janeiro, sponsored by that city's Tourist Bureau and costing $554.30. We hope this is a straw in the wind, a sort of foreshadowing of closer ties to the south and more feasible arrangements for getting us down there.

Meanwhile Varig Airlines of Brazil has started operating de luxe Lockheed Super-G Constellations twice a week from New York to Buenos Aires, with stops at Ciudad Trujillo, in the Dominican Republic, Belem, Rio de Janeiro and Sao Paolo in Brazil, and Montevideo in Uruguay. The Super G Constellation, we can report firsthand, is currently about as luxurious a way to fly as there is. Varig's covers the 5300 miles in an amazing 25 hours' flying time, and for extra grandeur the meals served are prepared at New York's Colony Restaurant. Varig, incidentally, has been operating within South America since 1927.

Panagra (Pan American Grace Airways) has lately added some new Douglas DC-7B airliners to their Miami-to-Buenos Aires route. This flight, called the El Inter Americano Fiesta Lounge Flight, leaves Miami twice a week. Planes are said to be paragons of radar-protected, air-conditioned, radiant-heated comfort, with excellent food and all sorts of special services. Plane stops also at Panama, Lima in Peru and Santiago in Chile, gets to Buenos Aires in 16¼ hours.

Meanwhile, Eastern Air Lines and Braniff International Airways are now cooperating to fly you directly, without changing planes, from New York and Washington to the most important cities on both coasts of South America.

And, if you want to brush up on your knowledge of South America, the Publications Division of the Pan American Union, Washington, 6, D. C., has available a series of pamphlets, which we have found full of sound fact, on most of the South American countries. Pamphlets are called Visit Argentina (Brazil, Chile, Colombia, Ecuador or Venezuela) and cost 15 cents a piece.

To Nassau from Florida

New and intriguing divertissement for Florida vacationers is a three-day junket to Nassau from Fort Lauderdale, West Palm Beach, Tampa or Saint Petersburg. Mackey Airlines flies you to Nassau for a shopping binge and sightseeing, after which you sail idyllically off to Governor's Harbour, Eleuthera Island, on the 110-foot luxury motor yacht, the "Alomar III," for fishing, swimming or just plain loafing. On the third day you return to Nassau and late in the afternoon fly back to Florida. Tropical Travel Agency of Fort Lauderdale and Nassau Tours planned this all-expense outing. It will cost you about $85, but your travel agent can give details.

Sail on your own

British West Indian Airways, which provides a fine island-hopping air service throughout most of the Caribbean, reminds us that flying, which is their business, is great, but you can vary it with an out of the ordinary and not too expensive experience by chartering a schooner, sailboat or private yacht and visiting some of the tiny lesser known islands. With two or three couples footing the bill, the rentals aren't too steep—roughly from $400 to $500 a week. They can be rented out of Antigua, Trinidad or the Virgin Islands.

Now in North Carolina

This is the time, before November is out and the bright North Carolina mountains and coastal plains lose their brilliant foliage, to:

Go to Raleigh for the 88th annual State Fair, October 18-22.

See the Southern Seniors' Golf Tournament at Pinehurst, November 18-20.

Join the opening hunt (fox hunt that is) at Sedgefield, Southern Pines or Tryon, on November 24.

Or celebrate on November 24 the opening of the quail and turkey hunting season which lasts till January 31.

See how exciting a Gymkhana can be at Pinehurst on November 27, and meantime, see the pet show that's staged at the same time.

How much does it cost not to own Gorham Sterling?

There are two ways to learn how wonderful Gorham* Sterling is. One way is by owning it. The other way is by owning something else.

To the woman who decides to own something else—and use the money "saved" for other things—Gorham Sterling will always remain a dream. Like sterling silver itself, that dream will never fade. For sterling is a universal symbol of a woman's taste and breeding. It speaks volumes for her every time she sets her table.

In the character of its shape and design, Gorham Sterling reflects so much of its owner's personality. And the Gorham mark stamped forever on the back of every piece instantly reveals its owner's wisdom and foresight. That's why so many people think of "Gorham" and "Sterling" as meaning one and the same thing: the finest in solid silver.

How much does it cost not to own Gorham Sterling? A lifetime of satisfaction is perhaps not too much to answer. For the longer you have it, the more pleasure you get from it—and the lovelier it grows, too.

You can now buy the Gorham Sterling of your choice the same modern way you buy other fine things: choose your complete service and pay for it while you enjoy its use. Ask your authorized jeweler or department store.

The Gorham Sterling knife handle is made from a single seamless silver tube—not two halves soldered together. It is dent-resistant and rattleproof. Gorham Sterling place settings—including knife, fork, teaspoon, salad fork, soup spoon and flat or hollow-handle butter spreader—start from $29.75 (Federal Tax Incl.) Prices subject to change without notice.

come into your home with a Steinway

THE STEINWAY REGENCY Traditional design of the English Regency period with a subtle modern accent in wood and color. It can be delivered to your home by your Steinway dealer for as small a DOWN PAYMENT as $1595.00 Liberal terms. Slightly higher in the West.

The Steinway teaches lessons that are useful through life. The child, gaining keyboard experience, develops confidence through doing and the will to rise above pushbutton living. Artists and amateurs honor the Steinway for its technical perfection, its glowing voice and rugged long life. Today's Steinway, with Diaphragmatic Soundboard® and Accelerated Action®, is the result of more than 100 years of piano making. Giving so much in happiness for so many years, the Steinway is the most durable and therefore the least expensive of pianos. It is an investment that pays dividends in pleasure and achievement, too.

STEINWAY

The Steinway is the choice of great artists. The almost endless list includes names like EUGENE ISTOMIN, the famous young American pictured at right, and Guido Cantelli, Gulda, Leonid Hambro, Myra Hess, Eugene List, Menuhin, Gerald Moore, Michael Rabin, Serkin, William Steinberg, Tureck and many, many others . . . also nearly all of the nation's leading orchestras, radio and television stations.

Our booklet, "How to Choose Your Piano," will be sent free if you write Steinway & Sons, Steinway Hall, 109 West 57th Street, New York.

Twin-console Mark I, (6HF1). 4 speakers, 3-speed phonograph, FM-AM radio, Hi-Fi tape recorder. $1600

DICK KLEINER, NEA Service record columnist: "Cream of the ready-made Hi-Fi crop is the Mark I ... you hear every note, sharp and clear ... not just a record player—it's an experience."

rk IV, (6HF4). 3-speaker, 3-speed Consolette. $169.95

GOWN FROM HENRI BENDEL

On the night before Christmas, the head of the house
Trimmed a Parliament tree, as a hint to his spouse.
Then he called her right in—and his meaning was clear
A Parliament gift would be perfect this year!
With so many smart smokers the same thing is true
They're hinting to Santa for Parliaments, too.
Well now, how can you blame them—the flavor's a dream
The smart case is crush-proof; tobacco, supreme;
And the filters all recessed away from the tips
So that only the flavor touches your lips!

You're so smart to smoke Parliaments

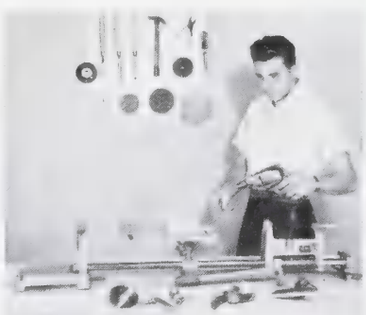
IT'S WORTH MENTIONING

By JULIE POLSHEK



For elegance in electric clocks, you'll find nothing to match Show Piece. The distinguished G-E Telechron clock is styled for compatibility with either contemporary or traditional décor. Its delicate design combines turned, polished brass with brush-finish, silver-plated metal, a perfect foil for the elaborately detailed numerals and hands. Size 13⅝″ x 6¾″. $100 (plus tax), from Altman's, Fifth Ave., New York 16.

You make these enchanting copper angels from sheets of pure copper grooved with outlined forms which you cut out with ordinary scissors. With the sheets you get copper mesh for angels' hair, adhesive tape that joins cutout parts. Even youngsters can handle the project. Kit, $2.75, makes five angel ornaments; four 4-inch, one 7-inch, usable for table, mantel or the tree. From Klem Kraft, P.O. Box 60, Planetarium Station, N.Y.C.

Do-It-Shop consolidates the seven most popular home workshop tools into a unit that occupies only a 3½ square foot area. An ideal set up for cliff-dwellings or small homes. The Cummins-Oster device is equipped for use as a bench saw, lathe, horizontal drill, vertical drill press, shaper, disc sander; ¼″ drill is removable for portable use. Quality is top flight. $79.95. Jigsaw can be added for $24.95. Elm Hardware Co., 871 6th Ave., N.Y.C.

Molded plywood trays, removable for serving, have rounded turns and a finish resistant to heat, water, alcohol. Cart structure is featherweight yet very strong; rolls easily even when heavily laden. Useful as a mobile buffet, bar or end table. Walnut or mahogany; brass trim. 23½″ x 16″ x 26″. $49.95, from W. & J. Sloane, New York 19.

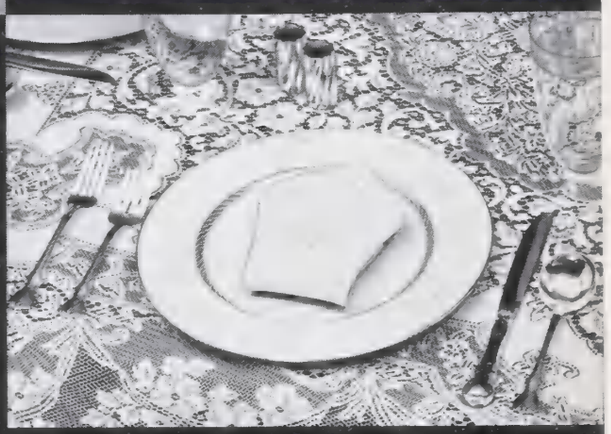
What possibilities in an old beat up table!

MAYNARD PARKER



With the aid of modern materials, this sturdy old table was easily altered to produce a handsome and useful boy's desk and hobby center. High pressure plastic laminate was applied to the old top with pressure-sensitive adhesive which requires no special clamping equipment. Plywood shelves, partitions, drawers and doors completed the alteration. (See drawing above.) Old and new woodwork was finished with one coat of wood primer and two coats of enamel.

You use Burcoware well-and-tree platter for roasting or broiling; then take it on the wooden tray to dining table for carving use. Heavy cast-aluminum platter is polished by a unique process that creates a silver-like, rugged finish. Use tray alone for serving cheeses or hors d'oeuvres; it's crafted of thick, grained maple with natural, heat-resistant finish. Handsome pair costs $17.95. From Here's How, 27 E. 22nd St., N.Y.

Level-Devil makes straight hanging of pictures, shelves or cabinets a cinch. A floating pointer, activated by gravity and atmospheric pressure, hits dead center when you have object adjusted to straight-across position; then simply mark wall accordingly. Two-face dial is calibrated in feet and degrees. Useful to level furniture, plot stair rise, terracing, fencing. $2. From Laramie Corp., 16 Putnam Park, Greenwich, Conn.

For eye-taking glamour, deck holiday party tables with this sumptuous nylon-net tablecloth by Hadley House. It's red, embellished all around the "drop" with white felt Christmas trees trimmed with glistening, multicolor sequins. Edging is metallic, gold braid. Corners have graceful flared gussets. Width 72": 2½, 3, 3½-foot lengths. $19.95, $21.95, $23.95. Available in all pink. From Frederick & Nelson, Seattle, Wash.

Broil-A-Foil pan, an aluminum foil "disposable" for broiling, couples high efficiency with work-saving convenience. Bottom is corrugated to drain off grease and the high sides keep all drippings in tow. Also, aluminum foil provides reflected heat that speeds broiling. Pan's construction rigidly supports even a giant steak. Usable in the rotisserie-broiler or range oven. $1.98 for 15. From Damar's, Damar Bldg., Newark, N.J.

Pictures are changeable at will with Minute-Mount framing. Ideal for photographs, children's art, maps, stamps. Just sandwich the object between reversible mount board (white, gray) and the plastic sheet that covers it over; snap-on plastic moldings (crystal) complete the framing project. "Y" hanger mounts picture horizontally or vertically. The fine quality kit costs $3.95. Minute-Mount, 527 Lexington Ave., N.Y.C.

Soft, warm carpet adds so much to Christmas

More than anything else you can buy for your home, carpet says warmth, comfort, a snug home.

For Christmas – and for the days after Christmas, the years after that, carpet goes on living with you and giving to you. Carpet quiets the hundreds of noises that go with family living. It provides safety for children at play or adults in a hurry.

Carpet gives so much and asks so little in care, in time and in money. It costs far less than you'd expect to pay – with budget terms, only pennies a day.

So, see the wonderful new styles and colors at your store now. Give carpet or have carpet this Christmas.

Have you met the fabulous Le Creuset?

Chances are you don't have a colorful fellow like this gallant gendarme dropping in to brighten up your kitchen—but if you take a cue from the French you can add a bright accent to your table—pure magic to your cookery—with wonderful LeCreuset.

LeCreuset vitreous enamel cookware has been used for generations on the Continent without chipping, discoloring or knowing the touch of a scouring pad.

The colorful flame red enamel is fused with extra fine grain cast iron at high temperatures . . . secret process—but what it means to you is that you will get more heat with less fuel because LeCreuset absorbs heat evenly (no hot spots) and holds it for a long time.

Whether your family goes for pork and beans or bouillabaisse you'll find it cooks better and looks better in LeCreuset.

See the complete line and this 5 piece starter set—specially priced—$11.95—at better stores.

AGED LIKE VINTAGE WINE
(Smoking alone takes 30 days!)

Jordan's GENUINE
VIRGINIA HAM

NEARLY 300 years ago, Virginia colonists sent to England hams of a distinctive savory flavor that soon were acclaimed by gourmet and royalty throughout the capitals of Europe. Both the fame and famous flavor have endured. Today, as then, the true Virginia ham is one of the world's delicacies.

Each magnificent ham now hanging in our aging rooms, slowly cured, smoked to a rich mahogany hue, aged approx. one year, has been tended by hand through each unhurried step—as we have done for the past 115 years. These carefully selected hams are put down in dry salt in cool cellars for 25 to 45 days, and turned often. The salt is removed and the ham allowed to mature for three weeks. Next it is rubbed by hand with a thick coat of black pepper. Then it goes into the smokehouse to hang for 30 days and nights over hand tended fires, until the juices drip and the dense, pungent hickory smoke permeates and flavors the meat. Then to darkened aging rooms, to hang for months.

And finally, just before shipment, each ham (in a 40-hour process) is soaked, simmered, the skin removed, the fat trimmed, then glazed with sugar and baked with wine to a savory feast of firm, sweet and tender meat.

Your Jordan's ham arrives ready to be enjoyed, needs no heating. It keeps for weeks and weeks. Traditional for Christmas dinner . . . perfect for cocktail party or buffet.

Sealed in amber cellophane, nested in burgundy tissue in Old Virginia Smokehouse box (carving, serving and keeping suggestions enclosed), here is a magnificent gift for those you especially wish to please this year, and a grand treat for your family.

Our hams are prepared to please discerning people, and we guarantee complete satisfaction. Weight 8 to 13 lbs. cooked; $1.89 per lb. (net cooked wt.) shipped anywhere in continental U.S. Please specify whether wanted now; for Christmas; or other date.

Tips on how to hint for this

Starting Set of beautiful Magnalite

Try pasting this ad on his bathroom mirror. This method of hinting isn't exactly subtle, but if he chides you just blame it on Junior.

Phone his secretary and tell her how ardently you want a Magnalite Starting Set. Like all secretaries, she's an expert hinter, she'll see you get it.

Try talking in your sleep, "Oh, me, oh, my! I'd love to get a Magnalite Starting Set!" He'll catch the hint, but he won't suspect your guilt.

Ask your mother-in-law to tip him off. She'll be glad to when you explain that with Magnalite you can prepare new taste treats for her boy.

"Oven-flavor" from top-burner cooking

As in an oven, food is surrounded by heat radiated from every part of Magnalite utensils . . . not from bottom only

No stooping over a hot oven—no anxious guess work—no burned foods—when you cook with these "miniature ovens" on top of the stove! Cast thick as two silver dollars, Magnalite radiates heat throughout all of these tightly covered utensils, produces fragrant "oven flavor."

Magnalite, a special alloy of five metals, holds heat or cold much longer. Cooks over a tiny flame, keeping kitchen cool. 100% dentproof, lasts a lifetime. Mild soap and water keep it as sparkling as your sterling silver. 15 different utensils at leading stores. Satisfaction fully guaranteed.

Pittsburgh Glass

makes the difference!

Maybe you're building a new home. Or, do you expect to renovate your present home? In either case, the exciting transformation that you can achieve by replacing a small, ordinary window opening with a handsome, big picture window will give you pleasure for a lifetime.

See what this simple change has achieved in the living room illustrated here.

Now the outdoors has become an integral part of the room—a living landscape to be enjoyed from indoors, winter and summer. Here's a ready remedy for dull-room "blues" . . . real relief from that shut-in feeling.

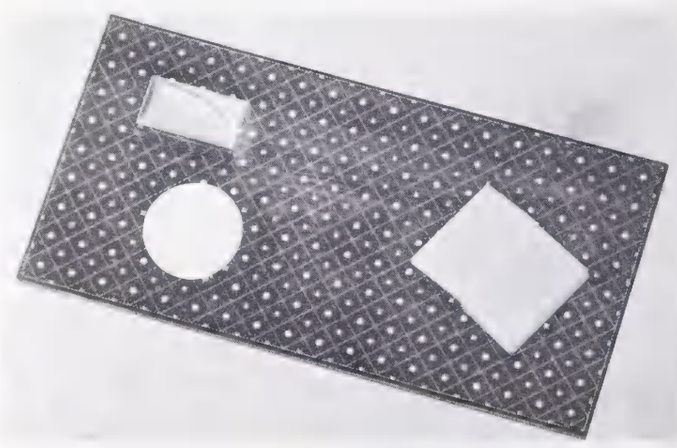
Decorator's Diary



On a flying visit to San Francisco I stopped, as I always try to do, at Jackson Square. This is a neighborhood abounding in importers and dealers in topnotch furnishings —a naturally entrancing neighborhood for a decorator. And, sure enough, at Regency House, I saw some ivory-inlaid wood from India which the Henry Bronsons must have in their new house even if it holds up their moving-in date for a month or two (and it probably will). Ivory inlay is not news, of course, but it is usually so florid that it's impossible to use except as an occasional cigarette box. But this rosewood paneling is so handsomely patterned, styled as a matter of fact, by J. Lowell Groves, that it is elegantly usable in large areas. It will be just perfect for the top of the Bronsons' living-room coffee table and for the doors of their high fidelity cabinet. The pattern is a hairline's breadth of ivory set into a rosewood panel, creating a diaper design of diamond shapes. Into these are alternately set little ivory cogs and quatrefoils. Coffee-table size panels measure 18″ x 36″. Other sizes and other designs are possible, too, but you have to allow time for all this special-order business because these must be shipped from India.

—M. G.

Didn't need to be told that Mrs. Cartwright came from Missouri. I could tell by her raised-eyebrow reaction to my suggestion that we "partition" that 30-foot living room with a hanging fabric, thereby creating a little "quiet" area or reading room without actually blocking off all light or crowding the room. But when I took her along with me to see the weavings of Franklin Colvin at the Bertha Schaefer Gallery, she was not only shown but sold on the idea. Miss Colvin's fabrics are loom art, hard to define because they are studies in texture and color and composition and are probably more accurately described as modern tapestry. And when Mrs. Cartwright saw an engaging weave, partly solid, partly sheer, stretched between top and bottom dowels and hung flat from the ceiling, as if it were a roller shade, she began to understand what I meant about using a fabric as a space divider. Colvin fabrics can be hung as draperies too, of course. But when you come across a piece of weaving art which is so beautiful you want to look at it both back and front, it's a pity not to take advantage of it. It's like being able to enjoy both sides of a painting.

ound some enchanting papers at agan-Dreyfuss—literally enchant-g, it turns out, for they are the nd of papers made by the Antai-oro medicine men of Madagascar r wrapping talismans and print-g magic books. They are natural color, extraordinary in texture, most silky, made from wild fig ee bark, and their curious dimen-onal patterns are created by en-sing within the paper such things seed pods, ferns, petals of trop-al flowers, grasses. When the

aper is lying flat or hung on a all, these give the paper its tex-re. Lighted from behind, as the paper is when it's used in a lamp-shade or in the panels of a screen, these forms become silhouetted patterns. Possibilities for this semi-opaque stuff are endless. It goes up as wallpaper with the usual paste; it can be fitted into split bamboo rods and hung as a room divider; it can panel a fold-ing screen or it can be made into lamp shades, in which case it is laminated to a fiber-glass-and-plastic light-diffusing base. I'd even like it as note paper—it is so beautiful. It comes in 29″ x 60″ sheets and in 3′ x 12′ rolls.

Tramped my feet off looking for wall fixtures for the Loomis dining room. Acceptable wall fixtures are not nearly as hard to find as they once were. But these had to be as elegant as crystal sconces, and somehow nothing I saw came with-in a mile of that. Never thought to look in Finland House because I was so sure Paavo Tynell, whose very special elegance was exactly what I thirsted for, did not make wall fixtures. It sure never pays to be sure. When I got there, as I ultimately did, I discovered they have a whole new series of wall fixtures with the pierced brass shades that started out as a Tynell trademark and ended up by being copied and copied and copied all over the country.

For the Loomis dining room I decided on a long two-bulb brass bracket with star-shaped perfora-tions. Could hardly be more simple in shape or look more lavish on the wall. We're using a pair mounted vertically. But I have a hunch there will be plenty of places where I'll want to use one alone and mount it horizontally. Must ask them if that will work.

New Floor Idea

A portable dance floor, of all things, is my recommendation for Mrs. Alcott, a lady with wall-to-wall carpet and three irrepressibly hospitable teenagers. Now, when the crowd forgathers at the Alcotts' they cut their terpsichorean capers on a smooth, tough, pressed wood surface instead of on the pile of Mrs. Alcott's precious broadloom. The floor, made by the Mueller Dance Floor Company, consists of interlocking sections of pressed wood squares which go down right over the carpet. Squares, which join together with a locking device, come in 23½″ and 47″ sizes. You buy as many as you need for the area you want to cover. They are reversible, black on one side, brown on the other, so you can create decorative, pseudo-parquet patterns with them. When the party's over, you simply stack up the squares in a closet until next time.—M. G.

Decorating advice by mail

If you're decorating or refurnishing your home, House Beautiful offers you this personal service

How many times have you said: "If I could only talk to someone who really knows decorating, I could whip that room into shape"? Well, here is your big opportunity. HOUSE BEAUTIFUL is offering you the consulting services of Elaine Neal, an expert who knows the home furnishings field inside out.

This is not a service handled by a department or a group of people. It is a truly personal service done by one person for one person. In other words, every room is visualized as a unit and seen through one pair of eyes from start to finish. We believe that this is the only way to achieve a thoroughly satisfying room scheme. But so personal and complete a service is not a matter of a few minutes' thought and the typing of a form letter. Before a line can be written, your problem calls for thoughtful evaluation, experiment with color and furniture placement, and a re-evaluation of our suggested solution before it is sent to you. All this takes time. And since so many readers turn to Mrs. Neal for advice, we urge you to allow her plenty of time to give you her best efforts.

Mrs. Neal tries to get her answers out as promptly as possible, of course, and this usually means within four to six weeks. But at certain seasons—particularly in the spring and fall—the mail piles up at such a rate that the time lapse can be quite long. And the only fair thing is to answer the letters in their proper turn. Therefore, we ask you to be patient with us should your answer not reach you within the four-to-six-week limit.

Try to send in your plans and information well ahead of the date by which you wish to complete your rooms, and follow carefully the directions on the opposite page.

'his is what you should send us:

. Send us a floor plan drawn to ¼-inch scale on good white ıper. (Please do not send blueprints.) Your plan ıould show window and door placements, with measure- ents and dimensions, ceiling height, and distances fireplace · jogs extend from wall. Indicate the location of radiation. pes, and electric outlets. Tell us the kind of windows you ıve, whether sash or casement, small or large panes, the stance of sills from the floor. Tell us in what direction the indows face, and if the room is light or dark.

. List your favorite colors, and tell us which styles of ecoration and furniture you prefer. List the furnishings ou wish to keep and what you desire to buy new. Tell us hether your taste leans to wallpaper or paint.

. Describe your location, whether city, suburban, or coun- y. If there is a particular condition which must affect ur choice of furnishings, please mention it. State your oblems clearly in separate paragraphs. The more care- lly you follow the instructions, the more helpful you will ıd the decorating advice you receive.

his is what we do for you:

. We will send your floor plan back to you, showing your rniture arranged in a comfortable, balanced manner.

. We will suggest color schemes and send color guide mples of wallpaper, paint colors, and fabrics. We cannot, owever, guarantee that all fabrics will be available in all gions, but our samples will serve as guides for your opping. We will suggest draperies, accessories, and the acement of pictures, mirrors, and lamps.

. We will send you this information—four pages of it—ipped together in an orderly, easy-to-refer-to portfolio. ″ x 10″. All samples will be pasted down neatly and curely on the pages so you won't mix them or lose them.

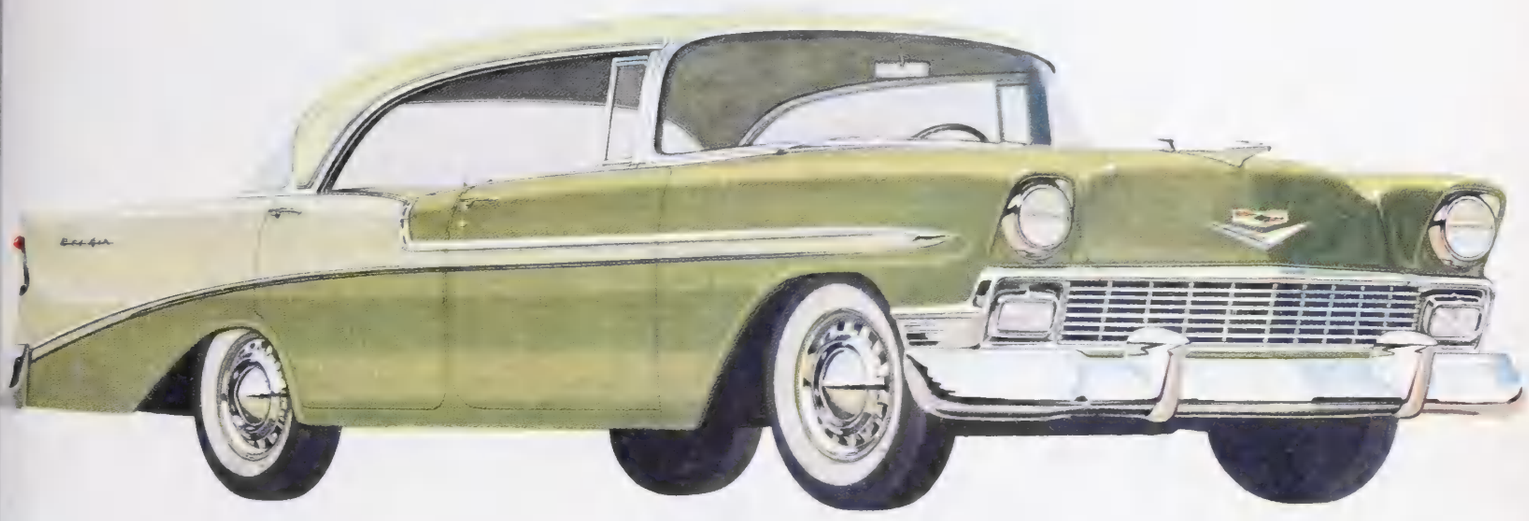
A skier at the top of a snowy slope on New Hampshire's Cranmore mountain feels "the world is mine."

How to leave home and like it

By MARION GOUGH

Right at the start, let us confess that to us skiing is not a way of life. It is good, clean, exhilarating fun in the fresh air, and a first-rate excuse to eat two plates of pea soup with croutons before dinner (one cup equals 200 calories). If we have any philosophical comment to make, it is simply that one man's schuss is another man's sprained ankle. Obviously, this frivolous point of view hardly qualifies us to give advice to the dedicated who have mastered the Kandahar at Tremblant and take the works at Alta in their Olympic stride. But we still feel competent to report to the easy-going some current bits of this winter's skiing news.



For example, out of the north comes the mystic theory that superior skiing conditions occur in seven-year stretches, and that Canada is now entering the second superb skiing winter of the latest cycle. We can only assume that what's good for Canada is good for the U. S. and hope that our own border states like New York, Vermont, New Hampshire and Idaho share the frosty wealth.

The most highly developed U. S. ski centers are still Sun Valley in Idaho, Aspen, in Colorado, Alta in (Please turn to page 188)

Heavenly Christmas Ornaments

This year we sponsor a veritable firmament of 8 trimmings to brighten holiday rooms with the golden glow of celestial spheres and the frosty whiteness of winter moons. Most significant, they are all important decorative accessories in design, color and scale, easy to use and appropriate anywhere

PHOTOGRAPHED IN THE SHOWROOM OF DUNBAR FURNITURE CO. BY WILLIAM HOWLAND

Celestial spirals

The glinting maze of gold streamers (left) is one of designer Joseph Zalewski's fabulous cutpaper "fall-outs." The design is so cunningly cut in flat gilt paper that it assumes a third dimension when the ornament is hung. Spirals are gold, faced with cerulean blue, in two sizes—12½″ in diameter, $2.50; 4½″ in diameter, 3 for $2. Also comes in all-gold. Glittering pillar on opening page is a joining of three spirals.

Golden orbits

Shimmering, mobile parabolas of gilt paper, right, suggest the luminous paths of the stars, they fold flat, for they are more of Zalewski's brilliant cut-out paper design. The large ornament, an imposing piece of glitter on its own, measures 33″ high, 18″ in diameter, costs $3.50. The small ovals, 12½″ high, 7″ in diameter may be linked together as here or hung separately; cost 90¢ each.

They range from a tower of stars to a chain

Star Towers

The intricate gilt lacework at left starts from a flat star-like base, pulls out to become an exquisite tower or tree, graduating to a slender spire at top. It may be hung from the ceiling (upper right) as a corner-filling, semi-architectural substitute for a Christmas tree. Later the ceiling-high tree folds flat as a pancake for storage. Needle-sharp steel pushpins are recommended for attaching all our ornaments to walls or ceilings without damage. Hanging Star Towers come in two sizes: 23″ at base and 13″ at base, $3.50 and $1 respectively, and no balls or embellishments included. A smaller version of the tower (upper left), provided with a flat wood base and a central supporting dowel, becomes an 18″-high table decoration. The table outfit comes with 24 one-inch Christmas balls (not as shown), costs $3.50. All ornaments made by Austen Display, Inc.

Solar Links
are non-fading garlands

Snowy satellites, circled in gold, and linked together with brass rings, can be joined endlessly in bright garlands, or it is a simple matter to separate them and use them as individual ornaments to hang on a tree. Balls are 4⅛-inch poufs of white honeycomb tissue framed in gilt circlets. In bags of 6, with 18 brass links, $2.40.

Star Rays, Snow Comets, Star Rockets

Left. Snowy white paper stars framed in aureoles of gilt are what we call Star Rockets. They open up in half-rounds and are shown here pinned flat to the wall. But a pair joined back to back creates a 6-pointed star to use as a hanging ornament (see opposite page). These are 24″ high, 12½″ wide, cost $2.40.

The all-gold starburst in middle panel, the gold wreath around the glitter balls on table, the impressive wall of stars below are all different compositions of a pie-shape gilt plastic dart called a Star Ray. They come in two sizes, 3¼″ wide by 9¼″ long at 90¢, or 6½″ wide by 19″ long at $2.

At lower left, a free-hanging shower of Snow Comets and Christmas balls is new adornment for a mantelpiece. Snow Comets are white honeycomb paper, opening out in complete rounds to look like graceful tops. 15″ high, 9½″ in diameter, $1.30 each. Christmas balls in jade and chartreuse are 2⅞″ and 3¼″ in diameter, cost $2.50 and $3.30 a dozen, respectively.

They represent a whole new approach to holiday trimmings

HOUSE BEAUTIFUL's 1955 galaxy of eight Christmas ornaments is an extension of the thinking that produced our highly successful ornaments of 1954. We believe—and according to sales records our readers of last December agreed—that a Christmas-trimmed room deserves to be as beautifully integrated in design, pattern, color and scale as any "seriously" decorated room at any time of the year. Indeed, we feel that the time-honored clutter of inconsequential baubles is outrageous extravagance when you observe what confusion of color and form they usually produce in holiday rooms.

So again this year, through stores throughout the country, we provide you with a color-controlled wardrobe of varied yet co-ordinated ornaments, usable alone or in groups, to make the business of transforming an everyday room into a holiday pavilion a sure-fire success.

We refer to these ornaments by "space" names, but this is no precious conceit. For it is in their space-filling, three-dimensional quality that they differ most from the ornaments of last year. Most of them are designed to be hung or may be made to hang. Thus they give you the decorative plus of mobility. And this means that you may expect a delightful bonus of shadow and shimmer as they move and reflect light.

All this showmanship which you might call domestic "theater," is incredibly practical. Ornaments are made of fairly tough gilded pasteboard or expandable white honeycomb tissue paper or both. Every piece is capable of being folded flat as a pancake and stored between holidays.

For a list of stores showing these decorations, see page 190

PHOTOGRAPHS IN THE HOME OF EDGAR TAFEL, BY MAYNARD PARKER

Gilt-framed Star Rockets and Snow Comets combined (top) create a trellis-like, hanging space-divider. Fasteners are included with all ornaments. Right, the piano adornment, rather like celestial candlesticks, is a pair of standing Star Rockets. These come with bases, stand 25″ high, cost $9, make stunning table trim.

Moon melons or slender star rays combine for big effects

Melon Moons

Elliptical poufs of white tissue honeycomb, usable in half-round or pulled out in full-round for hanging, called Melon Moons, measure 12½″ high, 7″ in diameter, cost $1. See how you might combine them with Solar Links, creating a Christmas festoon. Note how snowballs of Solar Links are used half open around punch bowl.

Variations in golden stars

The splendid gilt medallion on the mirror opposite, the glistening fireplace fan, the striking punch bowl collar below, and the stylized welcoming motifs on entrance door (lower right) are combinations of the versatile Star Ray. Made of gilt plastic, lightweight, and as stackable as pudding molds, these individual pieces suggest almost endlessly different compositions. Fasteners come with them. Put two together and you create a pendant golden icicle (page 119). Door and table trim uses rays of each size. They come in two sizes, 3¼″ wide by 9¼″ long at 90¢, or 6½″ wide by 19″ long at $2.

General information on construction

You can make all four of these charming Christmas decorations from these three basic pattern pieces:
A. The 4-pointed star
B. The 8-inch square
C. The long strip

You get 2 stars, 2 squares and 4 long strips out of a single sheet of Strathmore paper. Don't try to cut any sheet in half or you'll lose the points of the stars. And don't put your pattern directly onto the Strathmore paper—put it on a piece of similar-size flimsy paper, then trace it. To transfer the patterns, you can clip sheets together evenly, pin-prick all corners, then draw connecting lines with a ruler. You can also use the ruler for folding along dotted lines. Now you're all set for specific instructions.

For details on how to make these ornaments, turn to page 180

This is for all those who like to cut and create things out of pieces of paper. These are simple Christmas ornaments. They not only look simple; they are simple. And yet they have an ornamental grace and a private kind of loveliness that put special accents where you want them—a hallway, a bare corner, a large window. They're the kind of things that stop an eye, catch a comment. They're not meant to meld into the wallpaper; they're meant to add a little bounce and sparkle to a home, and the best part of the whole thing is that it's personal; it's yours; you made it. The sparkle is all yours.

You start with scissors and paper—but not ordinary paper. The best quality is called Strathmore Alexis white water-color paper, size 22″ by 30″ and you should be able to buy it anywhere in the United States for 20 cents a sheet. Buy five sheets. This is a springy paper with a tough but beautiful texture.

Now all you need is a stapler, fine wire and free time. And if you want something special, buy a can of silver or gold paint spray. Then when your little girl comes home from nursery school and says, "Look what I made . . . ," you can smile and point and say, "Me too."

Christmas is a golden chance to stretch your imagination

The gay and pretty time of trimming your house for the holidays can be a precious opportunity for the expression of your own decorating ideas. With tinsel, gewgaws, and whatever materials you see fit, you can try for effects and then, mercifully, scrap them if they don't come off. Since no great expenditure is at stake, you can afford the luxury of making a fresh start at little cost. You will be building self-confidence, learning how colors, forms, textures and shapes go (or don't go) together. And while you're at it—if you really let down your inhibitions—you can create a gracious, enjoyable climate for a happy holiday.

← A serene and lovely vignette in the home of Mildred Bryant Brooks captures the spirit of Christmas yet uses no holiday trimmings per se. The owner simply recognized the festive potential in combining beautiful year-round objects with green leaves and candlelight.

Imagine a Christmas tree of expanded metal mesh—the stuff used for radiator grilles! John Ratikin made this one of three equilateral triangles for the Mervyn LeRoys. It is topped with a crystal lamp finial, studded with tiny balls, edged with glass bugle fringe.

Against the tawny stone of the LeRoy home, John Ratikin visualized a tree in charcoal gray with copper trim, executed his idea in a cone of metal screening, entwined with copper wire and hung inside and out with copper Christmas balls. It sits in a box full of greens.

The spice of Christmas is the element of surprise

Christmas, as every three-year-old already knows, means imaginative surprise. Why else the time-honored hiding of gifts, the teasing deadpan looks, the elaborate, loving subterfuges before the glorious, astonishing moment when the tissue is torn and the recipient, trembling with disbelief, cries out, "Oh, no! It can't be! But it is!"

That's part of the fabric of Christmas, and if you stop to recall the most memorable holiday decorations you've ever seen, chances are that the same precious aura of surprise, of the unexpected has carried over into wreaths and garlands or the trimming of the tree. All this takes is imagination and a spirit of playfulness. The chief lack is the courage to stretch that imagination and take a whirl at the new, the unlikely, the different. Try it this year. You may see trimming for a tree in porcelain figurines or colored tassels. You may find garlands in fringe or a door wreath in the bright colors of vegetables. Just dare to take a chance! You will surprise your family and your friends—perhaps even yourself.

A beguiling surprise dreamed up by Mildred Bryant Brooks is the indoor-outdoor Christmas tree that fills the floor-to-ceiling window in her living room and deceives the eyes of guests within and passersby without. It calls for two matching trees with back branches removed. One tree is placed against the window inside (right) the other against the window outside (left). Both are indentically decked with white ceramic birds made by Marguerite Ransford, with buckwheat blossoms flocked in white, with satiny white balls and clear pinpoints of twinkling lights. Imagine the fun if the window had no crossbars!

A pine cone-and-nut corsage for your house, mounted on a plaque that you'll hang like a picture, or use in pairs, like tie-backs, for triumphant window dressing. About 10″ long. $3.50.

Holiday Beauties from the Forests of North Carolina

A crescent of simple things found in a hushed forest, now becomes a many-splendored thing to garland a Christmas mantel. 21″ garland, $10. 50¢ per additional inch on special order.

A swag of pine cones and nuts is a decorative exclamation point, the very monotone of the woodsy-browns implementing the beauty of the materials. 30″ long. $15. Add 50¢ for each additional inch desired.

This is the Happy Wreath. It belongs wherever laughter is, and full hearts, and the glad hubbub of company coming, packages being wrapped, piggy banks being opened. It's a 20" circle of woodsy-brown nut and pine cones, acorns and fat little porcupine balls. $22.50.

These festive and beautiful decorations are the result of a charitable effort by the French Broad River Garden Club of Asheville, N. C. co-operating with the country women around Asheville. For twenty years they have been working together to properly harvest and beautifully compose the bounties of nature to grace people's homes at holiday time. This year, for the first time, they feel they have enough workers trained in conservation pruning and the making of decorations to warrant offering their wares to a larger public than the local Asheville citizens. HOUSE BEAUTIFUL thinks so too, and offers for your mail-order consideration five of the prettiest, made of pine cones and nuts. We believe they would grace any home or apartment and bring the clean sweet smell of the evergreen forests to your holiday festivities.

Address your orders to the charitable foundation known as Biltmore Country Market (sponsored by the French Broad River Garden Club), Biltmore, N. C. All prices are postpaid. The enterprise is in co-operation with the Federation of Home Demonstration clubs, the Asheville Agricultural Development Council and the Asheville Council of Garden Clubs. The baskets are made by blind workers and secured through the N. C. Commission for the Blind. Happy decorating to you wherever you are!

Pine cones gathered by country women fill a fireside basket woven by a blind Indian. Throw a cone into the fire and watch the flames turn into a rainbow of colors! $8.50.

A WELL-PLANNED TRIP ABROAD

Along with the trip itself give more than guidebooks which tell what you ought to see; give books of background and books of sensitivity to properly prepare you for what you want to see

By ROY McMULLEN

Although tourists are not supposed to be conspicuous for charm, I remember three of last July's fellow migrants with pleasure. They were obviously American, a trim couple with a blond sapling of a boy, and they were standing inside King's College Chapel at Cambridge, squinting happily across the sunlit nave. The man was reciting, very softly, Wordsworth's sonnet:

> Give all thou canst: high Heaven rejects the lore
> Of nicely calculated less or more;
> So deemed the man who fashioned for the sense
> These lofty pillars, . . .

And he wound up with an excellent three-word summary of Gothic architecture. "See," he said to the boy, "no wall."

Several morals about the craft of living might be drawn from this incident, but I mention it to reinforce a Christmas suggestion. Have you thought of giving your family next summer's vacation itinerary? Of the luxury of unwrapping such a package through a whole winter of fireside reading, talking and dreaming? Clearly, my Cambridge trio had done something like that. Their trip abroad had evidently begun months before, in their own living room, and I think that's why they were finding the going so good.

One of the basic joys of travel is that all the platitudes about it, including this one, are true. It really is broadening, and yet we really do find, in a sense, only what we take with us. And this hoary paradox is a fine pretext for adding an extra dimension to the pleasure of being at home. Knowing this winter where we are going next summer can mean leaving our intellectual rut and setting off in pursuit of the purest, fairest and most voluptuous of all forms of knowledge—I mean the form which has no earthly use whatever.

If, for example, you have decided to abscond south of the border, you can start in your living room by reading George C. Valiant's The Aztecs of Mexico, a surgical study of a society whose cruelty and ritual fascinate us—they are so unlike our own. Then, having renewed your acquaintance with Prescott's classic Conquest, pondered with scholarly detachment the effect of a corn economy on the fine arts, and climbed in fantasy the steps of innumerable temples, along about March you may find yourself becoming something of a connoisseur of Mexican pottery. And that may lead you to look into Herbert Read's The Meaning of Art, in which, amid a lot of other wise or provocative assertions, pottery is praised as "a sure touchstone" by which to judge a people's "fineness of sensibility." I am not sure I agree with that opinion, but it shows how far the idea of going somewhere can take you, long before the sweet showers of April stir you into thinking of packing your pilgrim paraphernalia.

Perhaps you intend flying to Japan: hours of droning far above a metallic sea and then a sudden, exquisite reduction in the size of everything except eyes. You can start this evening by looking at a few prints, and tomorrow you might decide that you now have a good reason for getting into focus what you know about the subtle and liberating influence of the Japanese on modern American home design.

Or if you are for the Iberian peninsula next time, you can begin by seeing Portugal through the perceptive eyes of Sacheverell Sitwell. Then, for Spain, you can switch to Kenneth Tynan's brilliant Bull Fever. (Please turn the page) a book which has had the critics roaring olé! for several months now, and which is guaranteed to turn you into an armchair aficionado overnight. You might add a flamenco album to your record library; Westminster has one which is as vivid as Christian ears can stand. And of course no one should think of savoring Spain without a preliminary draught of Hemingway—not, I suggest, for the sake of the slightly third-Martini philosophy, but because of his extraordinary talent for making the walls of your living room open on the prospect of a sunburnt village and a long road in brutal landscape. He has the eye of a great traveler and the precise, nostalgic sense of place.

Here I suppose I ought to interrupt myself and try to dispose of a heckler or two. I know that there is another school of thought in these matters, what might be called the school of non-thought. Surprise, it is said, is the pleasure proper to the art of travel, and foreknowledge kills surprise. (Actually, it doesn't, as any clever child can tell you on Christmas morning, but let that pass.) Moreover, "getting up on" an ancient center of culture has been known to turn normally nice people into irrepressible pedants. So the sophisticated thing to do is shut your eyes, stick a pin in the map, and grab the first plane in the general direction of anywhere.

I admit that this kind of deliberate innocence abroad can be agreeable on occasions, and that tourists who are nonchalantly ignorant do seem to have a peculiar emotional security which gives them a social advantage over the culturally anxious. But I wonder how many people are really capable of the bliss of being in Florence and not caring a hang who that fellow Giotto was. Not many, I imagine, of voting age. Most of us can manage a mild swagger over our ignorance of economics, and that's about all. The practical objection to spur-of-the-moment tourism is that it too often results in our sitting desolate on some distant cafe terrace, wondering what to go see and reflecting that four thousand miles is a long way to come just for a Coke. Of course we can buy a guidebook, but at that late hour all even the best of guidebooks can do is to tell us what we ought to see, not what we want to see. A list which could have been the menu for a banquet turns into a prescription for a diet.

The reason for starting your pilgrimage in your living room is that a thorough preparation will enlarge your sensibility, which is a solemn way of saying that you will have more fun both this winter and next summer when your trip actually begins. So drop a place name in your family pool of consciousness and see where the waves take you: Paris, Johannesburg, Buenos Aires, Quebec, Port Said, Verona.

Verona? Ah, Verona. "But what Verona?" asks Edward Hutton in his Venice and Venetia. "In the memory of the world she is the city of Juliet, perhaps of Catullus . . . a city of romance, a place inviolate in our dreams." She is also, he adds, a fortress, "the iron gate (Please turn to page 204)

You can do it with the new. splendid, ready-made phonographs—and we show them to you in appropriate décor.

Why Hi Fi?

High fidelity, our experts tell us, is better sound. It is the culmination of hundreds of improved links in the electronic chain

By CHARLES FOWLER

EMELIE DANIELSON NICHOLSON

Some people are crazy! Or are they? Most people (not crazy) can be seen, once every ten years, shopping for a radio-phonograph in music and department stores and trying to decide whether the modern bleached walnut cabinet or the traditional mahogany affair will look best in their living room decorative scheme.

Once this important decision is made, the dealer will deliver the unit ("finest sound since Edison invented electricity"), push aside a couple of end tables, plug it in, and graciously accept a check for x dollars.

The new radio-phonograph will require dusting daily and will be used to answer the question, "What's happened to radio these days?" when the TV set is boring. The new owners of the electronic industry's finest product will be happy with their radio-phono combination and will wonder why the crazy people next door spend so much time fussing around with—what do they call it?—their hi-fi set.

Well, what have the people next door got? A high-fidelity system? And what is that? Ah, that's a tough one. What's a sports car? Is a sleek, expensive convertible a sports car? Or does a car have to seat only two and have no top to rate the "sports car" name? High fidelity is much the same. In essence, it is better sound: it is the culmination of hundreds of improvements which have been made over the past 25 years to the entire chain of electronic equipment, from recording microphone to home loud-speaker. If ownership of a sports car is the key to enjoyment of the thrill of driving, for driving's sake alone, then a hi-fi rig is the key to the thrill of enjoying phonograph records, radio and tape, for the sake of the music and sound they provide.

The shining mahogany affair is (Please turn the page)

Built-in "breakfront" for hi fi

Great depth needed for TV makes a decorating problem. It was cleverly done here, thanks to formula of building it into a breakfront. Greatest depth (27″) does not seem so great, thanks to pair of shallower set-backs on each side. Record player and speakers are set into the deepest part of the breakfront. A man's study and music room

Acoustical needs of a quiet workroom are the same as for good sound reproduction. So it was logical to marry the two. This room was built in order to contain the sound within its own space. Music system is all assembled on one wall. Little louvered lights in wall allow owner to change records without lighting up entire room. Study was deliberately given cave-like feeling to aid absorption in the task or in the music. Residence of Henry Wheeler. Paul Hoag, designer.

Hi-fi is the main axis of party room

In the "cantina," in the Bel Air home of Dr. and Mrs. Herbert T. Kalmus, the music and entertainment system has been made the focal point of the entire room. Soft luxurious seating is on opposite wall, grouping easily around the axis that culminates in music and visual entertainment. Yet when closed, the whole assembly has architectural interest. like the convertible. It could be high fidelity, but the chances are good, in my opinion, that sound more faithful to the original—music higher in fidelity—could be achieved, and the individual's enjoyment thereof would be greater by a considerable margin, by a personally assembled hi-fi system than by most factory phonographs.*

For instance, one of the rules of thumb of hi fi is this: Except in well-designed instruments, the loud-speaker of a true hi-fi system should not be mounted in the same cabinet with the record changer or player. Why so? Well, record grooves contain infinitesimally small squiggles and indentations which the needle in the cartridge must follow exactly, down to the last millionth of an inch. If the speaker is mounted in the same cabinet, it requires special construction to keep the sound produced by the speaker from making the record and cartridge vibrate—which will, of course, create new sounds which are not desired.

Having the speaker separate contributes in another way to realism. When the people above brought their radio-phono home, they put it against the wall between the sofa and an armchair (which seems to be the generally accepted location for radios). But very few people hear a symphony concert from behind the orchestra, yet that is exactly what happens when phonographs are so placed. The hi-fi expert puts his speaker across the room, facing the listening area, so it plays at him, just as an orchestra would.

And in spite of the time he takes to select his equipment, he is essentially a lazy person. If he wants to change a record, or alter the tonal balance of the sound, or turn down the volume while he answers the phone, he doesn't want to have to walk across the room to do so. He puts his equipment in a cabinet next to his chair, where everything is within easy reach—but places his loud-speaker wherever it will give him maximum listening pleasure. For the hi-fi man, this is no problem.

Lazy? Yes indeed. He wants to listen to his music in peace, but he must also keep (Please turn the page) an ear open for untoward noises from the nursery. The average person, under these circumstances, must keep the radio (or TV) turned down and the nursery door open and still trot back and forth every now and then to be certain everything is under control at that end of the house. Not the hi-fi man. He installs a microphone in the nursery and runs a wire to his hi-fi set. The slightest sound will wail forth over his loud-speaker.

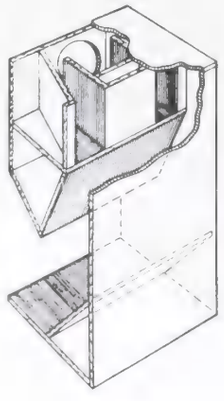
Or perhaps he likes music or radio programs while he "does-it-himself" in his workshop or darkroom. For the hi-fi man: easy! Simply a wire with an extension loud-speaker downstairs, upstairs, outdoors or wherever.

That is one fundamental aspect of a "tailor-made" high-fidelity system: It is flexible. (In some furniture instruments, input and output jacks are provided for this purpose.)



A hi-fi system can be completely disguised and hidden. Everything, including the loud-speaker, can be put into a closet. Or the speaker can be housed in the closet or in an existing cabinet, and the equipment put behind a small panel on a bookshelf or in another piece of already-owned furniture. This can be carried to extremes. I know of at least one installation where the TV set is built into the ceiling of the master bedroom, and disappears into the ceiling when not in use. Channel switching and all other operations are performed through a small remote-control box hidden in a bedside table.

Nevertheless, remote-control TV sets such as this are often integral parts of a hi-fi system: brightness, contrast, fine tuning, volume and channel selection are all done through a small tuner chassis which may (Please turn to page 202)

If you rig your own hi fi, you must be careful to have equal quality of all parts. Best speaker spot is the room corner, but this isn't always true.

What makes a good phonograph?

By IRVING KOLODIN

To undertake an answer to the simple question posed in the title above convicts the writer of one of two attitudes: supreme arrogance or incredible naïveté. For, if there were a workable formula to solve that vast imponderable, would it not be much better—not to say more profitable—to market it in the form of a unit so excellent as to discourage all competition?

Not being engaged in a quest for profit—not grossly, at any rate—I suggest that there may be a third attitude, involving neither arrogance nor naïveté, but merely a certain amount of experience. I say that what makes a good phonograph may be expressed in a single word: efficiency. But the conditions that spell efficiency in one situation may not satisfy in another: hence the words that follow.

We have all had the experience of riding in a car and hearing on the limited—however expensive—auto radio the reproduction of a recording which gives off an amazing likeness of brilliance, luster, tonal sparkle. In any real analysis, none of these attributes could possibly be present in a device at best no more than a number of inches square, utilizing a speaker with a cone hardly as large as the smallest record—namely, the 45 rpm 7-incher. (Please turn the page)

Paul McCobb designed this package unit for Bell & Howell (above) putting together the radio-phonograph and tape recorder. Available in five finishes, it is in teak above.

There's not much point in having a good "woofer" unless you have a good "tweeter." Admiral (left) has both—a tweeter horn along with a woofer bass speaker.

DRAWINGS BY HARRY MARINSKY

For maximum hi-fi efficiency, you need a separate speaker cabinet, as in this RCA model (left), another complete unit, which includes tape recorder. Warning: Hiding speaker blurs the sound.

This unit by Capehart (above) has a tape recorder tie-up, but keeps the dual two-way speaker system in the same cabinet. You can also use the amplifier as a public address system.

Even if you're short of wall space, you can still have good sound with portable Columbia model that has four fine speakers, a three-speed record changer and provision for attaching a radio tuner.

What makes a good phonograph?

Nevertheless, we note the sheen of the strings, sense the aural surroundings in which the recording was made, respond to the articulation of detail in brass, woodwinds and percussion.

How is it possible and why is it so? If the sound is as good as it seems, why the need for over-size amplifiers and speakers? There are, however, a number of factors that have to be taken into account. The record has been played, at the studio, with a fine diamond point, no doubt, in an arm properly weighted, passed into an audio circuit well supplied with filters to detain unwanted noise from the surface, sent out on the air in apple-pie aural order. Assuming that your car radio is working properly, the sound is restated by an apparatus admirably exact for the amount of listening space involved.

Nobody would argue that a 5-, 6- or 7-inch speaker can reproduce the audible spectrum from 30 to about 16,000 cycles. But remember this reproduction is designed to reach an ear not much more than a foot away from the sound source. The wheel is here; the radio there. Very little is lost in the enclosed area of the car's body; all the listening is done in close focus to a central point. It is, in a word, a highly efficient operation.

Translated into more usual terms for home reproduction, what makes a good phonograph is decidedly relevant to the space the music is meant to fill, the level of listening preferred by the individual listener, the demands of fidelity imposed by his or her aural culture. Nothing is so absurd to the indoctrinated listener. (Please turn to page 164)

This Stromberg-Carlson model (above) features a tilting bin at the bottom to give its electronic equipment better visibility. It also has a special corner cabinet that can hold a 12-inch speaker.

Another advantage of the complete set is that it not only offers sound pleasure—it provides visual pleasure. This V-M console (right) with separate speaker comes in four finishes.

Snobs and Sobs

By HERBERT KUPFERBERG
Record Editor of The New York Herald Tribune

The author discusses two kinds of music lovers: the snobs, who forget music in their ecstasy over Sound (with a capital "S") and the sobs, who think that there is nothing like the good old days. Are you . . . either?

It may be significant that the most famous record listener in all history is a not a person, but a dog—the dog immortalized in the pose of cocking his ear thoughtfully into a loud-speaker from which emanates his master's voice.

Dogs may have limitations as record listeners, but as all thoughtful students of the hi-fi craze know, they also have advantages. They do not, for instance, break in on a record to exhort you to observe the oboe passage just ahead. They do not ask you whether you have ever listened to such singing. They don't inform you that the sound you just heard has been clocked by experts at 14,000 cycles per second. They don't shout across the room that it's just like having the Philharmonic in the parlor. In short, they just listen, and what they hear they keep to themselves. This, undoubtedly, is one of the reasons they are known as man's best friend.

But not all of today's record listeners are dogs, despite the fact that some of the high frequencies said to be audible on modern hi-fi records lie more within the canine than the human range of hearing. People also listen to records, and people present problems, as philosophers and tax-collectors have been pointing out for a good many years.

Anyone thinking of taking up record collecting, then, had best be forewarned of some of the foibles and fancies he is likely to encounter among his fellow collectors. Alexander Pope spent a lifetime of study and several thousand iambic pentameters arriving at the conclusion that "the proper study of mankind is man"; similarly, the proper study of record collecting may very well begin with the record collector.

They're nice people, most of them. It's amazing the number who live normal, well-adjusted lives without knowing a tweeter from a woofer or a pre-amp from a roll-off. High fidelity to them simply is a means of listening to music with the best possible set they can afford, and music is something to be enjoyed without too much regard for fads or fashions.

If this can be construed as a suggestion that hi-fi addiction, like any other kind, can be carried to excess, construe away. I am not quite (Please turn to page 171)

Musical Comedy collected and recollected

By ABEL GREEN
Editor of Variety

Melodies are milestones in our personal lives; the longer the tune survives the taller the memory, and frequently the warmth, the poignancy or the nostalgia becomes accented in direct ratio to the longevity of the composer's work.

There is nothing closer to recollection and to the romantic heart than a musical comedy or operetta. This would apply to such memorable Broadway smashes as Rodgers and Hammerstein's South Pacific and Oklahoma!; or the yesteryear Maytime, Blossom Time, Desert Song, New Moon or Student Prince, all by Sigmund Romberg: Rudolph Friml's Rose Marie, Victor Herbert's The Red Mill, or the timeless Merry Widow by Franz Lehar.

Too often a musical comedy excerpt is more distinguished out of context than when in the original source. There are instances galore, such as the Oscar Hammerstein II-Jerome Kern "All the Things You Are," from the flop Very Warm for May, which ran seven weeks on Broadway. Or Cole Porter's "Begin the Beguine," out of the ill-fated Jubilee. Or the manner in which Walter Huston capitalized on his "September Song," originally in the short-lived Knickerbocker Holiday, but which the dramatic actor had to sing between-acts of his straight plays, truly "by insistent popular demand." In truth, Huston's al fresco manner of warbling a warm ballad from a dimly remembered show while touring with a straight play titled Apple of His Eye did much to bolster that show's grosses.

There are instances, too, where incidental songs have become signal successes with the years. Irving Berlin fashioned "A Pretty Girl is like a Melody" as a casual number at Florenz Ziegfeld, Jr.'s request, when the producer wanted "some incidental music" (Please turn to page 186)

Great Opera recorded in high fidelity

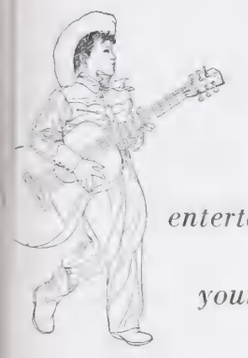
By RICHARD WILLIAMS
Music Editor of House Beautiful

The most complex of musical instruments is the easiest to hold fast on records. No satisfactory explanation exists for this paradox. No scientist has come forth with a statement to elucidate this fact of art. All we know is that it is a fact: The human voice has a particular affinity to recording. Long before high fidelity, long before modern methods of recording were perfected, records were made which give an adequate, and in some cases an exact, reproduction of the original voice. Not, to be sure, in every type of song nor with every singer. As there are certain faces which photograph well, so are there voices which record well. Others do not. Here again the reason is so far unexplained or, possibly unexplainable.

Because of the success in capturing the voice on grooves, early recordings were mostly voice recordings. At first speeches, then ditties, then songs, then popular arias from the opera. The phonograph began to be taken seriously as a means of conveying music when Caruso made his first recordings in 1902. He made his last recordings in 1920, the year before he died. Within these eighteen years it was possible to catch in many recordings the glory of the most famous voice the world had ever heard. And, surely, here was a voice as complicated a musical instrument as any, a voice which combined an almost mechanical accuracy with a deviation from the norm. It is that blend which gave the voice its strong heart appeal. In listening to it today, tears come to our eyes and we forget the surface noise and the squeaks on the records.

I have put down this preamble about the voice presented in low fidelity, in old recordings, because in our delight over the new high fidelity we may (Please turn to page 172)

For Baby or Beethoven



DRAWINGS BY EUGENE KARLIN

There are two million tape recorders in American homes today, and sales are going up at an ever-increasing pace. Current production is close to one million tape machines per year. Home recording is obviously becoming a major free-time activity, in much the same way that amateur photography captured the nation's fancy several years ago. To continue the parallel, most tape machines are distributed through the same outlets: you're likely to find them wherever cameras and photographic supplies are being sold and displayed.

Such a mushrooming interest generally cannot be explained on the basis of a single, all-important impetus. There must usually be several coincidental reasons, each more or less important, to account for a national enthusiasm of this magnitude. Certainly one of the most influential factors, in the case of home tape recorders, is the relatively recent music boom. Good music has (thanks to the long-playing record) become available to us in unprecedented quantity, and we are now a music-conscious people. With a tape machine we can record a broadcast performance and preserve it indefinitely, or transfer to tape music from a treasured but fragile disc record, keeping the record as a master copy. Some recorder-owners borrow friends' discs to copy; unrecorded tape is comparable to disc records in cost.

Another contributing force (allied with the first, but distinct from it) is the Tape recorders aren't just gadgets any more. You can make them extensions of your living, your entertainment, yourself. Tape can catch and keep anything from your baby's first struggle with speech to a Beethoven symphony high-fidelity sound movement. The better tape machines can record and reproduce sound that is almost impossible to distinguish from the original. Naturally, then, most hi-fi'ers include recorders in their long-range plans.

By ROY F. ALLISON

And far from the least important reason for a tape recorder's popular appeal is that it is an entertaining gadget. You can record anything you can hear, from the baby's first gurgles to the soundtrack for your own movies: you can make new sounds from familiar, prosaic ones (a drastically over-amplified watch tick, or a piano recording run backward, is completely changed in character); you'll enjoy watching your friends' faces when they hear their voices as others hear them: in short, you can have a lot of fun with a recorder. Its uses are limited only by your ingenuity.

You can pay less than $100 or more than $1,000 for a tape recorder. There are few genuine bargains: you get just about what you pay for, and only you can decide at what price the law of diminishing returns becomes operative in your case. Yet there are some features you should look for, and can get, at any price level. I'll mention them briefly, and try at the same time to give examples of the better machines in each price class.

Below $200, the recorder that can qualify as "high-fidelity" is rare indeed. You should look for pleasant (undistorted) sound, with a low noise level, rather than wide frequency range. The tape should be easy to thread on the machine, the controls should be well grouped and positive in operation, and there should be easy access to the heads for frequent cleaning and demagnetization. Watch out for machines that break or spill tape: many will, if not adjusted properly. There should be a safety catch to prevent putting the machine in the recording position accidentally when you mean to play a tape, because you'd then erase rather than play. Most machines in this price class are light in weight and portable, with built-in, minimum-quality power amplifiers and speakers. The sound is often improved if you can use a larger speaker system, so it's nice to have an "external speaker" connector on the recorder. And a really significant improvement may well be possible if the machine has an output connection from the circuit before the built-in power amplifier, and you use this connection to feed a hi-fi system.

Among those with which I am familiar, the Wilcox-Gay model 4F10 and the Crestwood 304 have all these features. So do some Revere, Pentron, and V-M models, except for the hi-fi connection.

Above $200, most recorders are designed primarily for operation with high-quality sound systems and so rarely have built-in power amplifiers and, even less often, built-in speakers. One exception is the Ampro model 756, which costs about $240. It doesn't have a hi-fi connection as supplied, but an adaptor kit is now available for that purpose.

Recorders from $200 to $600 are generally portable, although some are quite heavy. They can, of course, be built into a high-fidelity sound system permanently, and all are capable of true hi-fi performance. Among the less expensive good ones are the Crestwood 404 ($230)

Tape Recording Glossary

MAGNETIC TAPE: Thin, flexible paper or plastic ribbon, one side coated with powdered iron oxide mixture.

IPS: Short for "inches per second." Standard tape speeds are figured on multiples and sub-multiples of 15 ips. Fidelity increases with speed. Most used speeds: $3\frac{3}{4}$ and $7\frac{1}{2}$ ips.

RECORDING HEAD: Small electro-magnet fed by electricity. Tape must pass in front to magnetize the oxide in patterns of sound.

ERASE HEAD: Permanent magnet or coil which wipes out sound patterns so tape is ready for fresh recording.

HALF-TRACK HEAD: Permits use of only half tape's width, so you can turn tape over and use other side. Problem: It's difficult to edit.

SPLICE: Mending of break in tape, usually by simple overlay of Scotch tape. Also used for specific editing.

Hollywood's most popular music store

Whether you live in Hollywood, or are a visiting fireman from Pakistan, sooner or later you're likely to drop in at Hollywood's newest Mecca. This is a mammoth self-service record mart called Music City, which has made the corner of Sunset and Vine virtually an around-the-clock habitat for thousands of the city's music-minded. Enter Music City at any hour between 10:00 A.M. and 2:00 A.M. the following morning and you will take your place in a queue of record fans waiting for the chromium turnstiles to whirl you into the inner sanctum of the rhythm conscious, where one of the country's largest selections of records is arrayed on tiered racks with the convenience and eye-appeal of a supermarket.

Browsing among the five busy aisles you will rub elbows with a colorful assortment of record collectors ranging from longhairs to crew-cuts and from movie stars to teenagers. Before the glassed-in listening booths these line up in everything from dungarees to décolletage, and hot-rodders wait their turn along with more than one white-haired oldster to slap a disc of Bo Diddley or the Mello-Larks on one of the twenty turntables that are geared for "pops."

If you are of a more serious turn, you can take your long playing disc to one of the eight relatively soundproof cubicles that flank the central archway, above which "The World's Largest Serve-Yourself Record Dept." challenges you in neon script. To enter any of the booths, you must first be buzzed in by the pretty young cashier, who limits your selections to three records and, during the rush hours, your listening time to fifteen minutes.

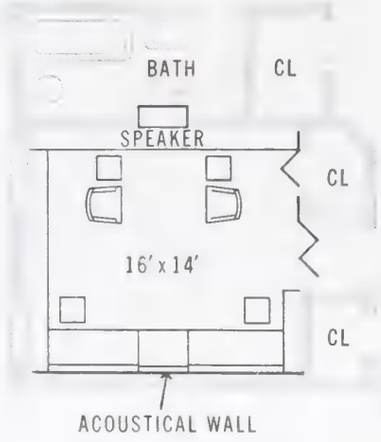
A small room designed for listening

Once a small extra bedroom, 14 by 16 feet, this room was made into a handsome place for withdrawal into the world of reproduced music. It was designed for excellent, comfortable listening, for sound highly faithful to the original recording and, on top of it all, it can double as a guest room upon occasion.



An unusually fine sound-absorbing wall was created along the wall opposite the speaker by furring or making a false wall, three inches from the real wall, out of perforated wallboard. Covered with a heavy cotton tweed, it makes an excellent surface for absorbing sound waves and so preventing fuzziness or echoing.

Tuner, amplifiers, controls and speaker are housed in the hollow space of the former doorway to an adjoining bathroom. (There is another entrance to the bathroom.) Easy access to all the hi-fi components is provided from the bathroom side, where they are housed in a cabinet-like extension within the old door-frame.

The television set is placed in the bottom third of the ex-doorway, within the custom-made cabinet along the lower wall. Space for the deep TV tube was "borrowed" from the bathroom, into which the back part of the set now projects, allowing for ventilation and quick servicing.

All in all, an entire home entertainment system, including a guest bedroom, was made out of this small space.

More about this room on page 173

Extra depth required for TV-tube is gained by using old bathroom doorway. Tuner, amplifiers, controls and speaker unit are also recessed into this space. Wall-long cabinet is 16" deep; hides television, accommodates record-changer and albums, yet allows for guest storage space. Black lines in above drawing indicate changes made in converting bedroom to music room.

Unattractive Victorian moldings were masked by new cornice boards made of thin plywood—for cleaner, more simplified appearance. Shelves above closet continue across whole wall. Louvered doors, used for cabinets, closets and entrance, bring not only unity to room, but a smooth, horizontal line that makes its sixteen-foot length seem longer. Predominantly black and white color scheme is another space-creating factor.

Two single beds slide under blanket storage compartment which reduces each bed to sofa width. Beds are covered in same fabric as soundboard wall. Brass accessories and red rug bring warmth to otherwise severe color scheme. Notice how sparing use of furniture—two chairs, four small tables—makes room appear larger.

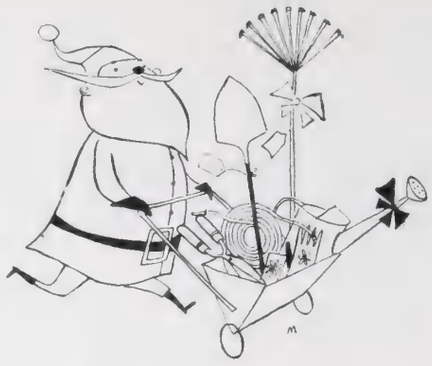
A Feast America gave the world

Maize, turkey, clams, pimientos, tomatoes, potatoes, gherkins, avocado, blueberries, pumpkin, Brazil nuts, peanuts, allspice, vanilla, chocolate—these are only a few of the foods the New World has added to the world's table. With American canning, freezing and packaging, a distinguished little supper like this below can be served at any season

By POPPY CANNON

Now is the One World season of the year, time for English plum puddings, German lebküchen, Italian anise drops, French bûches de Noël. The whole world of gastronomy has become a part of our American holiday tradition. And so it should be.

We have inherited the earth. The treasures of the Orient are ours. We spice our meat balls in ways that were written in Sanskrit, in the Books of Veda, by the ancient Aryans of India. They have been altered, but not too much, by the Swedes and Hungarians who brought them to us. We have our sherbets from the gardens of Persia; our sweets from Constantinople and Alexandria; our cakes by way of Athens, Naples and Paris. A thousand pasts are on our table, a hundred nationalities serve us.



In the main, the influences that made our cooking have traveled from East to West. But not entirely! It comes as a great surprise to most people that a large part of European and world cuisine, as we know it, would not have been possible without produce discovered in this Western Hemisphere. Actually, Columbus found not only a geographic but an epicurean New World. Before he landed among the cashews and cassavas of the island of San Salvador, there could have been no polenta in Italy, no Neapolitan tomato sauces, no French-fried potatoes, no pimientos rellenos, or ensaladas or gaspachos in Spain, no Hot Pots in Lancashire, no Viennese chocolates. Even the Cantonese New Year's feast would be bereft of sweet potato dumplings. The Congo would have no chicken with peanuts. The turkey did not come from Turkey, nor the Irish potato from Ireland: they came from the Americas. The menu on this page is essentially our own, belonging to our soil, rooted in our past, possible only here and in our present. (Please turn to page 192)

Gift Inspirations for Gardening Friends

When you garden, there are always new plants to try, new improvements to make. That's why garden gifts are often the most treasured gifts of all

Plant display tables

The gift gardeners dream of: indoor plant stands with the quality and appropriateness of fine furniture. Have them made to your order or fit any low tables with shallow pans of galvanized iron—or copper if you can afford it. Nice for someone else to give: the permanent greenery of ferns, or kangaroo vines; standing order with florists to keep a continuous display of flowering pot plants. Table 42″ x 18″, about $26. Galvanized tray to fit, $16; in copper, $24. Vines from $1.50 a pot; flowering plants from $2 a pot.

Paving for a new terrace

Don't put off building the new terrace, or extension of an old one, that your house needs. Order it now as a gift the entire family will enjoy for years. Flagstone set with tight joints like that shown should be installed by a professional. Brick or concrete blocks are easier for amateurs to handle. Approximate cost of 100 square feet of flagstone unlaid is $75. Crushed rock footing for same area of paving costs about $10. Give paving alone or commission its installation.

Snow removal equipment

You can make clearing snow less a strain with the gift of a gasoline- or electric-powered blower which sends light snow to one side or the other, the direction regulated by a switch. A standard home snow-blower (above) costs about $80. In a new line of garden equipment the power is in the handle, with mower, cultivator and snow-blower interchangeable. Snow-blowing attachment for the more versatile machine is also $80.

Gift order of choice perennials

Trying new plants is adventure for gardeners. A new series of chrysanthemum hybrids, new iris or daylilies, especially fine varieties of phlox or other perennials, any plant untried and appropriate to the receiver's garden is a gift of anticipation. You can order now for spring delivery. Many nurseries send Christmas certificates. Three plants of a variety make a better display than singles of differing varieties. Three chrysanthemums cost about $2.50.

Christmas roses

The wonder of the Nativity, the fragile, ageless spirit of this special season are embodied in these enduring white flowers with shiny, leathery green leaves. Either the Christmas or similar Lenten rose (Hellebrous orientalis and H. niger) will bloom through the snow, providing flowers to cut for many Christmas centerpieces to come. Six plants delivered in spring or fall cost about $7. If you can, announce your gift with blossoms from your own plants.

THE TRUE

Bourbon is all-American, its basis our own native corn. Only in certain parts of the U.S.A. can be found the "atmosphere," the limestone waters, the oaks for the right kind of barrels

Bourbon has been called distilled essence of "America the Beautiful"—our native corn, rye, wheat, and the sprouted barley known as malt. It takes taste from our oak woods, our limestone rocks and our iron-free water. The yeast in the air that our forefathers breathed gives it character.

Bourbon gets its amber glow from fire—the char on the barrel—and its mellowness, in some mysterious manner, from the sap that stays in the wood.

Even though the base is always corn, this whiskey doesn't usually taste of grain but more like a brandy made of some mythical fruit—part apple, part pear, part peach. And the aroma! Like an orchard after a hard frost when the sun shines hot in cold air and the fruit on the ground starts smelling a little winy.

Early nineteenth-century Ashburton pressed glass "bar bottle" from the collection of Mrs. Ruby H. Welchel. Silver bourbon plaque, courtesy of S. Wyler, New York. Julep cup by International Silver is a copy of those beaten from silver coins by Asa Blanchard in Louisville in early 1800's.

By POPPY CANNON

AMERICAN SPIRIT

Many people have noted how an empty glass of bourbon often keeps the cling of certain unexplainable whiffs —almost like vanilla sometimes, or spicebush, or crushed walnuts.

Probably no other spirit has so much and so intriguing an individuality. From brand to brand, from town to town, even from block to block in Louisville the taste, the body, "the nose," the whole character of the liquor may change just as it does with wine in the vineyards of Bordeaux and Burgundy.

An enormous amount of literature about wine has developed over hundreds of years. But much of bourbon lore has never been written and some of it has been almost forgotten. During Prohibition, and as a result of scarcities after the second World War, there were Dark Ages for fine whiskey. It was almost unobtainable, except perhaps by prescription "for medicinal purposes."

"There were only makeshifts—or worse."

As Livingston Whaley, esteemed maitre d'hotel at the Old House in Louisville, puts it, "Such whiskey was made without love. There was no happiness in it, no grandeur, no remembrance."

Now grandeur and remembrance have returned. Bourbons—and the very best of bourbons—are becoming more and more popular, not only in various parts of the United States but in many remote regions of the world where American travelers, business men, military personnel, and diplomats have introduced it.

Still there is a bewildering lack of information: Just exactly what is bourbon whiskey? What is the difference between a bourbon and a blend? Between a "straight" and a bottled-in-bond? What constitutes "proof"? Why is some bourbon marked 86 and some 100? What is sour mash? How old should a bourbon be? What's the right way to drink it? With what foods? Most important of all, how do you select a good one: a great one: a gift for a bourbon drinker? These are a few of the questions to which we at HOUSE BEAUTIFUL have editorially applied ourselves.

Actually there are two American spirits—rye and bourbon whiskey. Rye was the first—brewed in the hills of western Pennsylvania long years before the Ohio River had become a thoroughfare to the Blue Grass counties of Kentucky. But rye is an Old (Please turn to page 197)

Bourbon is Beautiful for Cooking

If your roots are in Kentucky, Maryland or Virginia, perhaps you appreciate fully the wonders that bourbon can work on food. Practically everyone knows about Bourbon Balls, that delightful cross between cooky and candy. In many parts of the country this confection is as much a part of holiday fare as pumpkin pie and cranberry sauce.

There are some even in this forgetful generation who still "give a good drink of it every few days" to their fruit cakes; use bourbon in a glaze for ham, for basting a roast of pork, making spoon bread light, spiking a boiled custard, bewitching and bedazzling all kinds of sauces, like Newburgs, Hot Sauce and Burned Sugar.

Bourbon is for Burning

We have forgotten—many of us—how fine bourbon can be for burning. A good, aged bourbon has such body, such mellow flavor, and such a high alcoholic content that it is probably best of all for burning. While most brandies are bottled from 80 to 84 proof (40% to 42% alcohol), a bonded bourbon is 100 proof; it must be according to law. So it bursts into a high blue blaze when only slightly warmed. It is a dependable flambé, a fire full of vigor and lasting, too.

Like brandy, bourbon is a marvel in meat cookery with an affinity for beef and pork especially; it works in a most miraculous fashion to give a special tenderness to the meat and a special texture to the fat. Until you have tasted pot roast or smothered pork chops that have been blazed with bourbon after the first browning, your life as an epicure has not been lived.

Perhaps this is the place to warn against the use of "cookin' whiskey." In the old hierarchy, this was the lowest caste. Above it came "drinkin' whiskey," and afterwards, "sippin' whiskey." Whatever your choice of "drinkin' whiskey" may be, every dedicated cook will insist that her "cookin' whiskey" must be "sippin' whiskey," for nowhere is flavor and quality more apparent than when spirits become a part of her working cuisine.

"Nowhere," you will say as you disappear into (Please turn to page 182)

WHAT MAKES A GOOD PHONOGRAPH?

or so false to the realities involved as the advertising convention in which an attractive young lady—and they are invariably attractive—is shown nestling on the floor beside a man-sized console, delighted by the floods of tone issuing from a high-fidelity recording.

Either she has the machine throttled to a ridiculous likeness of its true power, or she has a tin ear—neither of which is flattering to the illusion of beauty (hence discrimination) she presents.

The simple fact is that for such close-up listening, or for listening in a small study, den or other compact area—say up to 10 feet by 10 feet—a device typified by the Columbia 360 (now paralleled by excellent small units of like but individual design from such makers as Webcor, RCA Victor, Philco, Magnavox, etc.) is reasonably efficient. Not all of the original sound is faithfully reproduced; but enough of it is suggested (and much of the effect in reproduced sound is an illusion) to satisfy the conditions involved. Even in this modest arrangement, a diamond point is imperative if you want to protect your LP records.

If you expand the area, you are going to amplify the problems involved. First, ask yourself the question and answer it honestly: Do you really listen to music, or is it just a pleasant background murmur to reading, conversation, work, etc.? It is hardly sensible to invest in a well-built assembled unit if you are going to play it consistently at a quarter of its normal level. Better, in such circumstances, to move your table model into the larger room, put it in a corner where it will not be obtrusive, and let it murmur.

However, if you do listen to what you play and long for clarity, depth, fidelity, etc., be prepared to consider the playing unit as a coherent part of the room's whole plan, rather than merely an afterthought. It is fruitless to spend hundreds of dollars for either an instrument or components, if the sound source is to be separated from you by a heavy piece of furniture which will muffle bass or suppress highs. Largely speaking (for reasons to be noted below), a corner is the preferable place for a speaker, but wherever it is located, don't put a deeply cushioned settee or chair in front of it.

Since all equipment, whether assembled or bought as a unit, falls into certain specific categories, it may be desirable to review briefly the function of each. Like any mechanical chain, each link is important; but it is a well-known audio principle that a well-matched sequence of moderately priced items is better—more efficient—than several excellent elements coupled, say, with an inferior speaker; or an expensive speaker fed by a poorish pick-up. Hence the average "non-mechanical" music lover is well served by a good instrument in which each ingredient is matched to the other.

What is a phonograph?

Virtue in the audio chain begins with a proper point (diamond is the least wearing on records, hence its universal preference). The small device in which the point is mounted is the cartridge, which transmits the minute impulses from the groove along wire leading to the amplifier. All this is housed in an arm usually referred to as the tone arm. It should, however, be mounted at the proper angle to keep the point on the disc with enough, but not too much, pressure.

If you like a record changer, buy the best you can afford. They are designed to do the job with the least harsh handling of the record. The arm will be properly positioned, and it doubtless will accommodate any cartridge you prefer. Cartridges have small points of variation, but all are quite acceptable in extracting from the groove an initial impulse with all the frequencies required. The better changers, too, have better tables (as the revolving flat surface on which the record sits is currently described), and are less likely to develop annoying rumble, or to fluctuate in speed.

The important middle link in the audio chain is the amplifier, perhaps the most generally excellent component of all. Ten watts of power is as much as the average listener will really require, but if you have the cash to invest, the 20- or 30-watt performers have justifications, in reserve power and minimum distortion at the lower levels. Most amplifiers today have built into them an adjustment device called a "compensator," which provides for each make of record the kind of response which permits it to sound best. They also provide separate bass and treble controls which enable the listener to arrange the kind of emphasis he prefers, and also to increase or lessen the treble or bass.

The forgoing is applicable either to complete instruments or selecting parts to be assembled for you. Your choice of one system or the other is more sensibly dictated by your own habits than by the theories of others. Its efficiency is going to be closely related in your mind to its looks, and the combination of sight and sound must be suitably balanced to give greatest pleasure.

However, if you want to reproduce the utmost quality that is contained in the excellent records being made today, I urge that the units we have mentioned—cartridge, arm, turntable, amplifier—be mounted together, with the speaker in a separate enclosure or with properly designed cushioning to avoid mechanical feed-back.

Many manufacturers' complete models are built with the speaker in a separate enclosure. Of course, this increases the cost

WHAT MAKES A GOOD PHONOGRAPH?

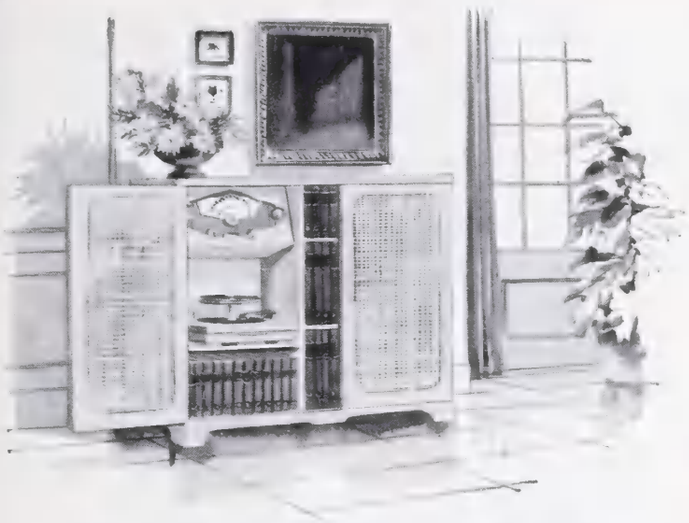
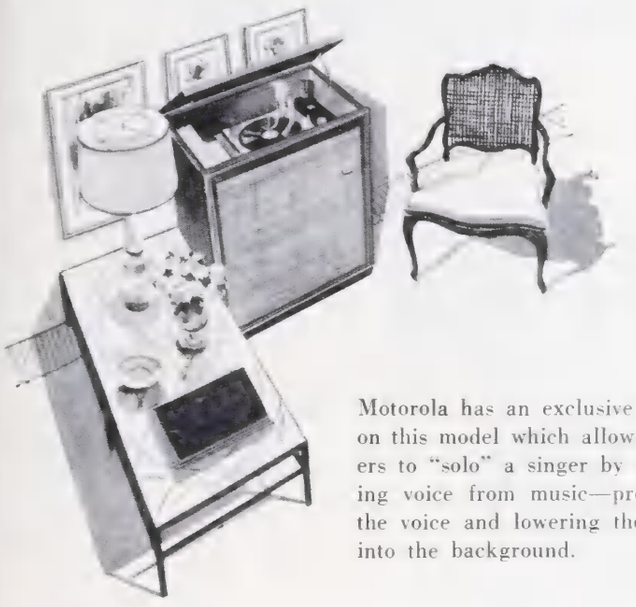
(two cabinets), but we are discussing here the very best in phonograph equipment. This arrangement serves two purposes, both, nicely enough, having to do with efficiency. The first group of elements, which require your attention for loading, adjustment, changing, etc., can be put in a chairside unit nearest to wherever you prefer for listening. The speaker can be positioned in a corner, where it may give you the acoustical benefit of the surrounding wall space. Moreover, you can do your adjusting at the place where you will be listening, rather than while standing above the source (as you must in any all-in-one unit).



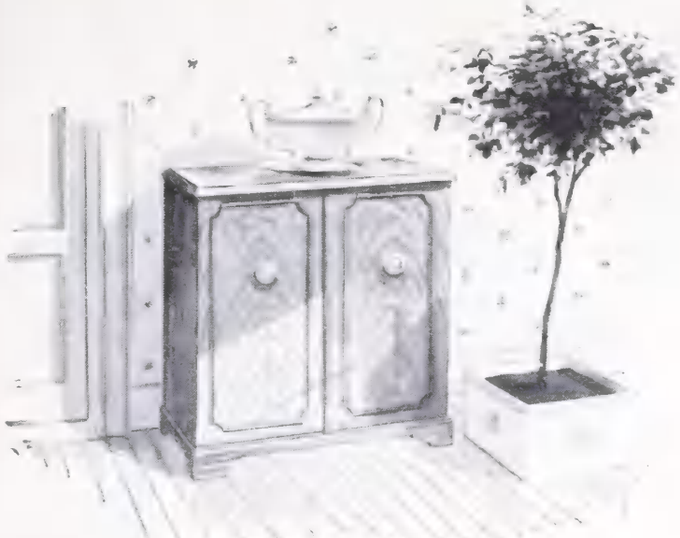
I have purposefully delayed discussion of speakers to this point because the speaker, per se, has little separate identity without the enclosure. In other words, an excellent speaker in a poor enclosure will sound decidedly worse than a fair speaker in a well-designed enclosure. The best thinking of today is strongly in favor of the corner speaker, in which a vent in the back of an A-shape device utilizes the surrounding wall as a reflecting surface for the sound. This may be of some advantage in getting a solid bass. However, if corner space is at a premium in your home, the ingenious manufacturers have designed corner speakers for people without corners. In these, interior paneling travels the sound in a circuit that simulates the corner effect. It also diffuses the sound, and gets away from that sensation we all know of the sound seeming to come out of a hole in the wall (or the phonograph cabinet). Some very good enclosures have been designed to fit into a bookshelf or other recesses, where wall space is pre-empted for more urgent needs.

Nothing can be said too strongly to stress the fact that every unit, from table topper to expensive hi-fi "rig," will not perform efficiently if there is a weak link in the chain. A frayed lead wire from pick-up arm to amplifier, a rumbly turntable, an amplifier with a loose connection, weak tube, noisy control or defective switch can cancel out all you have spent on a speaker enclosure, or defeat the planning of the manufacturer who put it all together in one cabinet. I will freely admit that the weak links are more likely to occur in a group of components than in a completely assembled unit.



The determining facts about what is a good phonograph, then, come down to these: Where are you going to use it? Are you a listener or an eavesdropper? Is décor of prime importance to you? How sensitive are you aurally, and what do you expect from a record? There is, also, the question of how much you have to spend—and "have," here, means how much you conveniently can spend, as well as how much you must spend for the results you require. My best advice is: Analyze the problem in advance and set your sights accordingly. Why spend twice the price of a table model if you are going to use only a quarter of what the more expensive machine will yield? And if all you want is an occasional source of diversion, why budget yourself for laboratory results? After all, what is a good phonograph for you may be another's extravagance, and vice versa.

Your Check-List of Phonograph "Musts"



1. Has the phonograph a diamond point for LP (turnover cartridge for 78 rpm)?
2. Has the phonograph a proper cartridge (see story for description)?
3. If a changer device is included, has it an automatic switch-off?
4. Is there a separate barrel spindle for 45 rpm records?
5. Are there separate controls for bass and treble?
6. Is there a device for compensation for principal "curves": AES, Orthophonic, LP, and 78 rpm?
7. Does the amplifier provide for connection of radio tuner input, tape recorder, TV sound?
8. Is a radio tuner included in the all-in-one unit? An FM tuner adds much to the pleasure of music lovers.
9. What size is the speaker or speakers? Eight inches or larger is essential for full-size room reproduction. For a smaller area, table models equipped with smaller speakers in pairs, or augmented by a "tweeter" device, will work well.
10. Does the current conform to the circuit in your house? (Some areas of New York, Washington and Chicago are limited to DC.)

Zenith puts the stress on simplicity with only two controls on its record player. They've created cabinets out of oak solids and veneers with a cane-weave front.

Motorola has an exclusive feature on this model which allows listeners to "solo" a singer by separating voice from music—projecting the voice and lowering the music into the background.

Whether you're a hi-fi listener or just an eavesdropper, you should first concern yourself with the music quality, then the cabinet. This Fisher model has both virtues.

eady to propose the formation of a society to be known as Audio-philes Anonymous, designed to restore hi-fanatics to musical sobriety and useful lives, but I am keeping the idea, and several prospective applicants, in readiness.

However, I would like to defer consideration of these electronic extremists for a moment in favor of another curious breed of record collectors, who might well be called the antiquity addicts, or singer-sobbers.

It generally takes a little time for the new collector to be introduced to this strange cult, for the practitioners of its rites are fairly cautious when they are seeking out new initiates.

The beginnings can be quite casual, even accidental. The singer-sobber learns you have started to build a record library lately, and asks with studied indifference what discs you have.

Well, you tell him a little diffidently, you have Beethoven's Fifth and the Overture to William Tell and a new recording of Madame Butterfly which your wife just gave you for your birthday for no other reason than that she likes opera.

"Butterfly?" he cries. "Butterfly? Tell me"—and he looks about to make sure no one is eavesdropping—"have you ever heard Rosa Raisa sing Butterfly?"

Of course not only have you never heard Rosa Raisa sing Butterfly; you've never even heard of Rosa Raisa. But no matter. You have now been introduced to the cult, and unless this particular devotee is far less tenacious than his fellow fanatics, you will soon be hearing Rosa Raisa sing "Un bel di" while the singer-sobber weeps by your side and asks you whether you have ever heard such a voice.

It doesn't have to be Rosa Raisa, of course. It might just as easily be Pol Plançon, or Margarete Matzenauer, or even Edouard de Reszke, whose fifty-year-old recordings are said to be worth $150 apiece and which entitle their possessors to life membership in the Antique Arias Association.

Before I go any further I should interject hastily that Rosa Raisa, Pol Plançon and the others were great singers, and it is fortunate indeed that as much of their art as could be captured by primitive recording techniques has been preserved to this day. I will even add, with only slight pressure applied to my arm, that they don't make singers like that any more—particularly like Plançon, whose velvety bass voice is almost enough to make a non-believer consider joining the cult.

The trouble with the singer-sobber, however, is that he isn't content to mourn the truly great singers of the past, such as Plançon, Caruso and McCormack—whose records, in long-playing reissues, belong to every good collection. What the true antiquarian wants are really forgotten singers, and he wants to hear them not in LP reissues, but on the battered old original 78 rpm discs. The more decrepit the record and the more obscure the singer, the greater his delight.

HIGH fidelity enthusiasm is a welcome and thoroughly healthy development in the recording art. It has brought music into the home with a closer approximation of actual concert hall sound than ever before; it has helped make possible a tremendous expansion in the record industry; it has made thousands of new listeners aware of the delights of collecting records.

But it has also brought into being that bizarre and baffling creature, the high-fidelity fanatic.

To describe him as a music lover would, however, be something of an exaggeration. He is not so much a lover of the symphonic as of the supersonic. He would never dream of calling his sound equipment a phonograph; instead he refers to it as his "set-up." Its various component parts are scattered about several rooms; its dials resemble the control board of an ocean liner's engine room; its speakers outnumber those at a political convention, and when it is turned on full blast (as it nearly always is), the sound can make a building tremble.

Hi-fanatics, as a general rule, play records on their set-ups. But one sometimes has the impression that they play records simply because records are the only things that fit their turntables. A hi-fanatic I know not long ago invited me to hear a recording of Liszt's Piano Concerto No. 1 in E-flat. When I asked him who played the piano in the recording he told me, with some embarrassment, that he didn't know.

"You see," he explained, "all

I've played so far is the third movement—the scherzo. That's the one with the part for the solo triangle, and you've never heard what a solo triangle really sounds like until you've heard it on my set-up."

This is by no means an extreme case. All hi-fanatics love exotic instruments, whether triangles or snare drums or contra-bassoons, and it matters little what music they play. I have another friend (you meet some odd people in this business) who seldom plays beyond the second measure of Beethoven's Violin Concerto because what he really enjoys hearing is the booming sound of the five kettledrum strokes which open this work.

In the face of the two extremes of sonic-snobbery and singer-sobbery, the new collector sometimes feels a little bewildered and lonely.

But as he listens to Dvorak's New World Symphony, conscious of nothing more noteworthy than the fact that he is rather enjoying himself, he may wonder slightly whether there is really anything more to ask of record listening. The answer is, of course, that there really isn't.

But just the same, every wise collector ought to keep a wary eye—and ear—on the snobs and the sobbers. For somewhere between them lies music, and music is what records are for.

OPERA IN HIGH FIDELITY

forget that our first consideration for enjoying opera is not the quality of sound but the quality of artistry. No engineer can take the place of a tenor. No amount of tinkering with the tape supplies the driving power with which a Toscanini infuses a performance. The combination of great artistry and good sound—ah! that, of course, is ideal. But the first question to be asked of an operatic recording is not "How does it sound?" but "Who is singing?" Having said this much, we can then rejoice that the science of high fidelity, the technical progress of sound reproduction, has turned out to be particularly useful in the service of opera. In two respects: First, by the fact that an extraordinary number of full-length recordings have been produced, and second, because the voice, captured with all its overtones, now comes to us with unveiled and lifelike impact. The best of these new recordings shine with new-bathed freshness.

Listening to opera on records has many advantages. Considering the price of opera tickets, you can buy a complete operatic performance for about what it costs you to visit the opera house just once. Then, too, you need not be annoyed by poor acting, gross appearance, and the excessive corporeal weight of a singer. The unseen illusion is often stronger than the stage illusion. At home, you can follow the opera with a libretto or with a piano score and acquire an exact knowledge of the action (which may not be so important) and of the art with which the composer has welded words and music and expressed the emotion contained in the text through the music.

For this high-fidelity issue we present a list of modern records which possess to a high degree the double virtue of art and science, of fine singing and fine sound.

PANTRY SHELF NEWS

I've an epicurean friend to thank for bringing to my attention a group of superb sauces placed on sale in New York stores quite recently. The Countess Tekla group comprises an even dozen and each of the sauces in its own way is a culinary masterpiece. Delice Sauce, a dessert or ice-cream topping, is a smooth blend that combines cherries, peaches, raspberries, strawberries and oranges. The rich-flavored blend of these fresh fruits is delectably supplemented with fine brandies.

Brandied Orange Sauce, delightful on sherbets or crêpes as well as on duckling or other fowl, is made of fresh oranges with very perceptible brandy "spiking."

Romano Spaghetti Sauce, richly flavored with fine Romano cheese, lends itself to use with all sorts of Italian dishes as well as to omelettes, rice or noodle dishes.

Mustard Sauce provided in this sauce group blends a bouquet of aromatic herbs with a tangy vinegar base enriched with cream and subtley accented with garlic.

Chili Sauce and Barbecue Sauce, two of the others, have many uses both in preparing meats and as meat sauces. A gift-package of these six varieties in an impressive box can be had for $5. Purchased individually, the two brandied sauces cost $1.10 each and the other four 59¢ each. All are in 6-ounce jars.

Mail orders for the Countess Tekla products will be filled by Bloomingdale's, Lexington Ave. at 59th St., New York. (Minimum shipment $3.25; prices given do not include shipping cost.)

If you like the unusual, Fyens Ginger-Flavored, Candied Green Tomatoes from Denmark are a delicacy you'll surely want to learn about firsthand. In Denmark, this delicacy is used for both fruit compote and as a relish to accompany meats or fowl. I, in adventuring a step further, found that the delightful ginger-flavored syrup affords a flavorful ice cream sauce.

Root ginger is used to give the syrup and tomatoes their aromatic fillip. The tomatoes themselves acquire texture like that of glacé fruits in the candying process. All in all, these factors add up to a superb result—a possible gift idea for the gourmet on your Christmas shopping list.

Fyens Gooseberry Compote, although homely when stacked against the candied tomatoes, also has unusual merit. The pack provides whole, firm gooseberries in heavy syrup sweetened just enough to remove the sour edge without impairing the natural tang and taste of the fresh berry. A delicious fruit filling for pie.

You can obtain both of these products by mail from Charles & Co., 340 Madison Ave., New York. Their postpaid price for a gift pack of the pair is $1.95; for two 16-ounce jars of the candied tomatoes or two 14-ounce jars of the gooseberries, postpaid price, $3.75.

It's a rich meat that you slice paper thin for sandwich use or hors d'oeuvres purposes; a rare treat either way. The hams run approximately 6 pounds in weight and are priced, postpaid from Charles & Co., at $14.95 for the vacuum-packed tin.

Burry's have introduced for the Christmas season a cooky pack devised to provide edible tree ornaments. The cooky forms comprise bells, angels, balls, tops and a house complete with chimney. All are decorated with multicolor nonpareils and baked with an eyelet to be used in stringing the cookies to the tree boughs. The cookies themselves are butter-shortbread, delicately spiced, delicious tasting.

This Burry Christmas cooky assortment, called "Fantasies," can be obtained by mail from Abraham & Straus, Brooklyn, N.Y. Three of the 1-pound boxes cost $2.57 plus shipping charges. Might also add that packaging of the cookies is done in a colorful, "gifty" fashion with youngsters in mind.

For holiday buffet or cocktail parties, Jordan's superb Virginia ham is available pressed into a boneless loaf that's easily sliced either by machine or knife; also every bit of the ham can be utilized without waste or scrap bits. With rich meat such as this, one wants to slice it paper thin, fat and all.

The ham, as such, is precisely the same as the whole baked hams produced by Jordan's. All of their hams have the benefit of long salt curing and some twelve months of aging followed just before shipment with wine-and-sugar baking. All of this produces as fine a Virginia ham as there is to be found.

Boneless hams range from 7 to 9 pounds each and cost $2.89 per pound (net cooked weight). They're available from Jordan's Old Virginia Smokehouse, 1427 East Cary, Richmond, Va.

The enchanting gingerbread house available from Damar's is a sure way to delight any child. The entire house, a structure that has a 12-inch long foundation, is handmade of delicious gingerbread aged to give it a rich, tangy flavor. "Outdoors" there are gingerbread benches resting on candies, flowers and hedges made of tasty candies and molded icings and half-open gingerbread shutters on the windows. Candy sticks and other hard candies, realistically suggesting structural materials, are fastened with icing to the exterior of the house. On the slanted roof and the chimney and on the "lawn" around the house, white icing creates realistic snow, while icing icicles hang from the shutter tops. There's even a candy-icing Santa looking as though he's about to plot his chimney descent, and in the other corner a lone robin redbreast is observing the wintry scene. The secret process used in constructing the 3-pound house insures safe shipment. The price is $5 plus 75¢ postage and ordering address is Damar's, 233 Frelinghuysen Ave., Newark 5, New Jersey.

When last April I passed along information on Holli Smith Workshop's liquored grapefruit-peel relish, I mentioned that they had fruitcake available. I didn't then have the very pleasurable firsthand knowledge I now have regarding the cake, nor is the spring a timely fruitcake season. All of which prompts me to re-open the subject and report that this homemade cake is superb. As rich as plum pudding it's made with creamery butter, country eggs, fine brandy and port wine. The recipe used, one brought to the Southern colonies by the earliest English colonists, is rich with plump currants and finely chopped bits of fruits and nuts. The cakes are aged with apricot brandy for several months which doubtless accounts for the super-rich, moist end product. This fruitcake is baked in round form in 2-, 3 and 5-pound sizes, $5, $7, $10.

In a gift pack called Gourmet Assortment, you get a 2-pound fruitcake, a half-pound of homemade frosted almonds, a jar of grapefruit peel in crème de menthe, rum or almond-flavored sherry wine. The three items cost $6.75. Ordering address for the workshop's products is: Holli Smith Bazaar & Workshop, P.O. Box 5233, Gulfport, Florida.

Leopold Stickley has devoted a lifetime to perfecting structural details that assure permanent value in furniture. His creations offer subtleties of design and execution found in no other furniture: Custom features such as shock absorbers on the hinges of drop-leaf tables: Expansion joints in case pieces that ease strain and prevent the finish from checking due to alternate swelling and shrinking: And a marvelous floating suspension that permits drawers to slide open easily and fully in any weather without sticking or sagging.

Construction like this, plus a fifty-year reputation for furniture of exquisite design and finish are the soundest guarantees that any purchaser can have of quality and value that will last over the years.

and the Webster Ekotape 212 ($225). Revere's new model T-11, at $264.50, looks interesting; it will take NAB reels but isn't portable. Higher up are several Magnecordette models (around $390); the Ampex 600 ($545); the Berlant BR-1 ($545) and Concertone 20/20 $445); and Magnecord professional portable models at about $590. The Berlant models both take reels up to 10½ inches in diameter; the Magnecord models will if you buy adapters for them. Although the Ampex 600 is limited to 7-inch reels maximum, it is very light and compact, a little beauty of a recorder. Crestwood and Ampex have portable amplifier-speaker units, at extra cost, that will work with any of the others too.

At the top of the heap, truly marvelous machines, are the Ampex 350-P ($1,293) and Magnecord M81 ($875) or M90 ($1365). They're "portable," too—if you happen to be a heavyweight yourself.

Four questions to ask before buying a tape recorder:

1. Does the seller have his own facilites to repair the recorder when it needs service? If not, and you don't know of any service organization competent to handle tape machines, better not buy there. Most ordinary radio and television repair shops don't have the know-how or the interest to bother with recorders.

2. What sort of guaranty or warranty is given with the machine? You should get at least a three-month warranty on parts, exclusive of tubes.

3. Is it a half-track machine? Most users find the slight compromise in quality due to half-track operation more than balanced by the increased economy in tape when they do their own recording.

4. Is it a dual-speed machine? In order to get listenable fidelity on music you must have a 7½ ips speeed or faster; for maximum economy on speech recordings, on the other hand, a 3¾ ips speed is desirable. Most machines have both. If only one speed is available it should be 7½ ips; don't get talked into a machine handling only 3¾ ips unless you're certain that you'll never want to record music.

WHAT GOES ON IN HOLLYWOOD'S MOST POPULAR MUSIC STORE

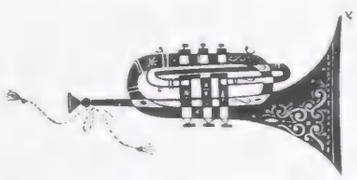
a small, buffeted island amid the lanes of customer traffic that flows between the record department and the display room for radios, phonographs and TV sets, where placards cheerfully announce that "Any item can be purchased on easy Music City credit terms," and large, framed portraits of the city's major disc jockeys gaze benignly down like so many patron saints of the "pops" world.

The day at Music City starts at 10:00 A.M. with the switchboard flashing into action. Early calls are likely to be from housewives wanting to know about a particular record their favorite disc jockey is playing. "I didn't catch the title," they frequently say, "but I'll turn the radio up good and loud and you see if you can recognize it."

All day long and into the night a steady buzz of queries comes through the board, ranging from "How tall is Ray Anthony?" to "What's the fare to Albuquerque?" Because Music City stays open so many hours—longer than any other music store in the world—people tend to confuse it with an all-night drugstore, and have been known to ask for everything from shaving lotion to Alka-Seltzer. They also phone to settle bets, try to purchase theater tickets, or find out where a favorite dance orchestra is playing, and the switchboard girl has become pretty sharp at recognizing any song from the tuneless snatches that people hum or whistle into her earphones.

Throughout an average day, any one of a score of movie stars is likely to drop in. It may be Marlene Dietrich, to see if a particular album has come in yet. Or Frank Sinatra, to pick out some "listening music" by his favorite batoneers, David Rose and Andre Kostelanetz. A penchant for "pops" and Dixieland brings TV's Jack Webb in frequently, and Jeff Chandler is a steady customer for popular sheet music. Yul Brynner, Eddie Cantor, Fred Astaire, Rock Hudson, Marge Champion, Helen O'Connell and Mary Pickford are other faithful clients, with tastes that range from barrelhouse to the "Three B's."

Donald O'Connor is a Sauter-Finegan fan, but his first question on entering is usually "What's your hottest seller this week?" Whatever it is, TV viewers are likely to see Donald and his partner, Sidney Miller, doing a parody of it before long on Donald's TV show.



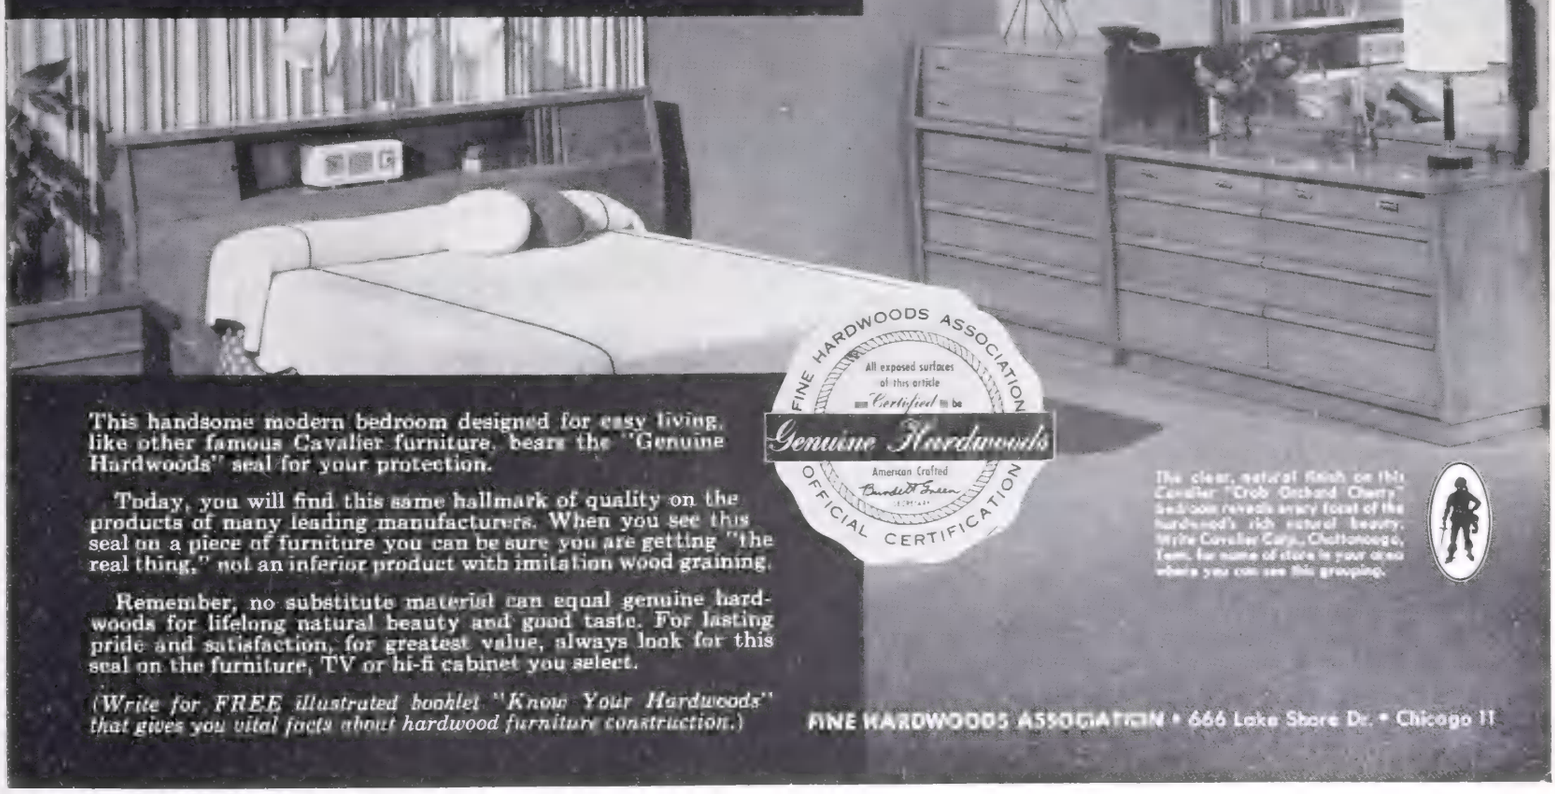
DURING noon hour, teenagers from Hollywood High and other nearby high schools rattle over in souped-up jalopies and converge on the listening booths to tear off a few beats of Quincy Jones or Perez Prado along with a coke and hamburger. At this hour the boys usually stag it, for this is a time of serious research. Later in the evening they will return, usually in groups of six to ten, still wearing their blue-and-gray or purple-and-white class jackets, and each paired off with a slick, sandaled, teenage "chick" for a social evening among the record racks.

Teenagers are not heavy buyers, but they are heavy listeners. Their musical tastes are fairly uniform, and while girls perhaps more than boys go for the sweeter items, it is hard to tell which generates more enthusiasm when the "pops" booths get to jumping with rhythm. These booths also testify to many seasons of whittle-happy occupants, with carved reminders that "Joe loves Sally" and "Eddie was here," while the small, doughty turntables are designed for endurance above all.

Rhythm affects the teenagers in a variety of ways. Some listen in what appears to be a catatonic trance, eyes fixed and unblinking. Others chew gum in a syncopated counterbeat to the music, while still others seem hurled into a mild seizure, arms flailing, shoulders twitching, head thrown back in an agony of enjoyment. Inasmuch as the "pops" booths front on Sunset Boulevard, pedestrians and passing motorists get a free show of teenage jivesters being "sent" by the latest hit tune, and this, along with the nightly barrage of neon signs that signal "Self-Service Records" for a radius of several blocks, helps to explain the store's bi-monthly turnover of a $75,000 inventory.

Another reason for this success may be found in Music City's slim, brisk, 38-year-old president, Clyde Wallichs, who six years ago came to the conclusion that the traditional way of merchandising records was old hat. A block down Vine Street a merchant friend was keeping a lucrative midnight vigil with after-the-theater shoppers in an all-night grocery emporium called the Hollywood Ranch Market. This set Mr. Wallichs to pondering. If self-service could work for groceries, he mused, why shouldn't it work for records—especially since they're a lot more fun to shop for in the first place?

Today, after six years as a self-service store, Music City has become a kind of barometer for popular record sales throughout the country. Top personalities in the music world, from Arthur Fiedler to Louis Armstrong, drop by whenever they're in town to ask, "How's it going?"—and by "it," of course, they mean their own latest recording. The store's unique location in the heart of the nation's glamour capital has also made for a large out-of-town clientele. Servicemen find it a landmark on week-end furloughs. Visitors to Hollywood include it on their sightseeing itinerary, and many of these, returning home, write back for records they cannot find in local shops. Mail orders also come from such far-flung zones as Hong Kong and Labrador, India and Brazil. One of Music City's best customers is the 36-year-old Maharajah of Mysore, who orders some $15,000 worth of records a year—all "classical."



To the question "What makes a record popular?" Wallichs replies in a single word: "Movies." Just back from the second lap of a world trip, he reports that the fastest selling record in Hong Kong is the score from Seven Brides for Seven Brothers.

Other stores are watching Music City's self-service principle. There is little question but that in the future more of such stores will come into being. There is little question that you will be able to sample and select your music just as you can browse in a good book store or select what you want in a supermarket. The self-service store is the record store of the future.

BUT without taking any credit away from Clyde Wallichs' achievement, we must observe that the success of Music City was carried high, indeed was made possible, by the great new interest which we Americans have found in music.

That interest has been fed by high fidelity, the opportunity to hear music better, by the lower cost of records and, last but not least, by the discovery, passed from family to family, that music is glorious entertainment. Glorious and satisfying entertainment.

BIG, BOLD DECORATIONS

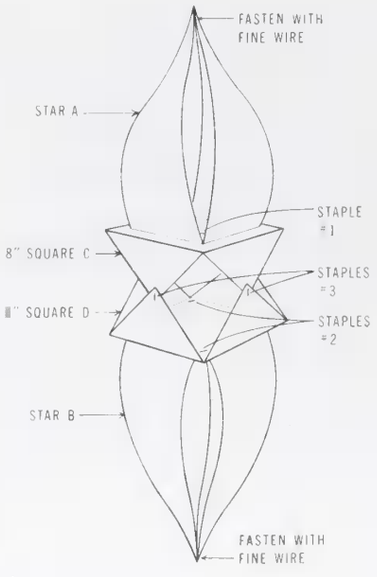
Pieces needed:

Two 4-pointed stars
Two 8-inch squares



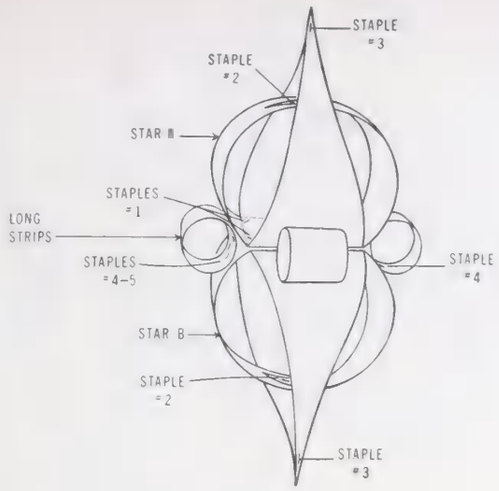
Method of assembling:

Fold points of two 4-pointed stars (A) and (B) and corners of two 8-inch squares (C) and (D) along dotted lines. The rest breaks down into three separate steps:

Place two squares together, back to back, and staple at four corners at staple point #1.

Center stars above and below squares, temporarily flattening out all folds. Staple together on corners of star at staple point #2.

Bend folds into positions as shown in drawing and tie together four points of stars with fine wire for hanging. And don't worry about the four leftover long strips.



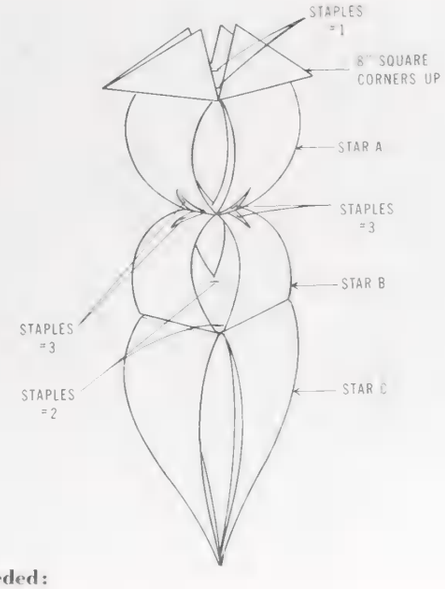
Pieces needed:

Two 4-pointed stars
Two 8-inch squares

Method of assembling:

This is a simple variation of the first decoration and also takes two stars and two squares, except that the squares are in the center with the points reversed. Again the preliminary folding, then center each star on top of square and staple at points #1 and #2 at all four corners onto both (C) and (D). Now simply staple tips of both squares together, overlapping about a half inch at points #3. Now get the wire again, tie the points together and you can hang it from either end. Notice that you again have long strips unused. You will always have some scrap paper left over on each ornament, therefore don't feel that you have left something out—if you follow directions. One point to re-emphasize: You need five sheets of Strathmore paper to produce four Christmas ornaments.

Pieces needed:



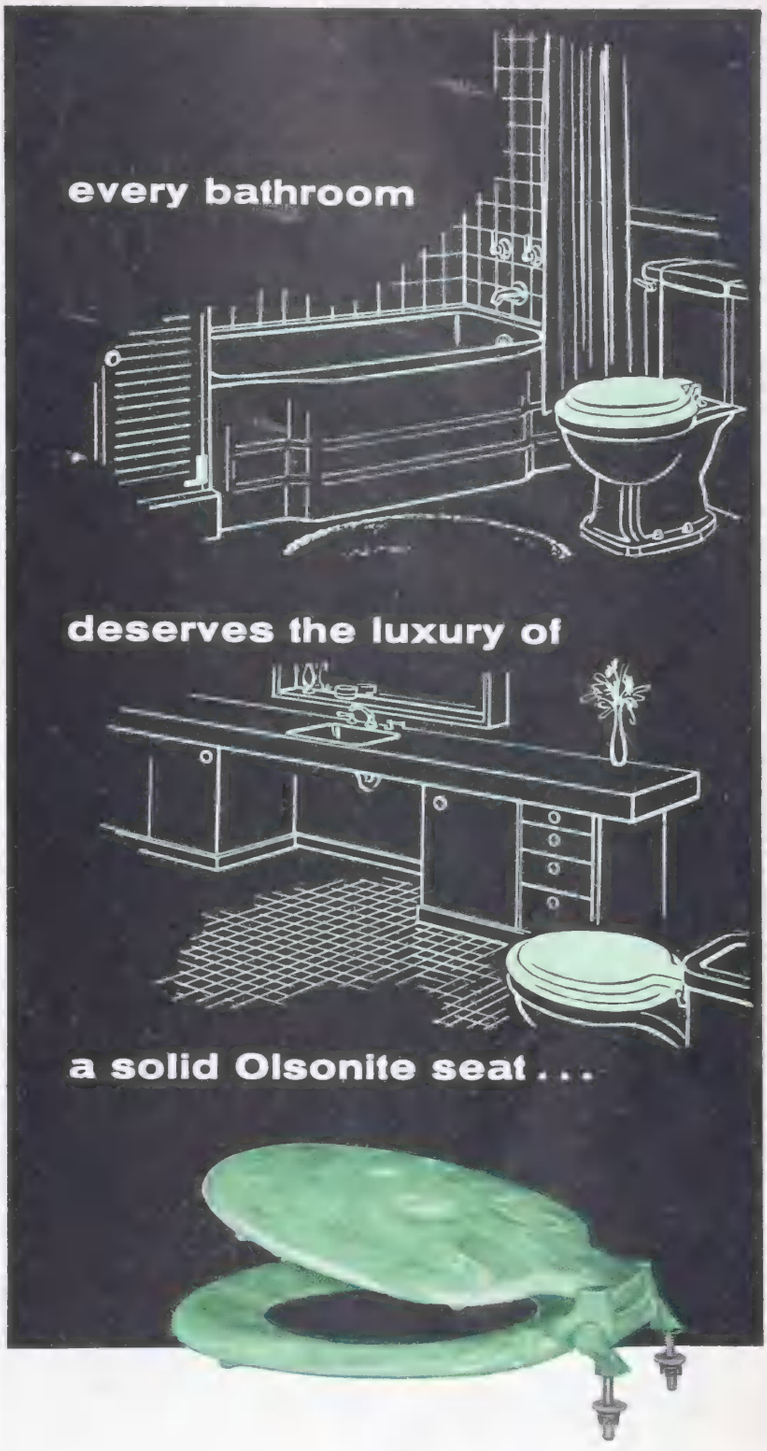
Two 4-pointed stars
Four long strips

Method of assembling:

First, fold points of stars (A) and (B) along dotted lines, placing both stars back to back as before, temporarily flattening them to enable stapling at four corners of staple points #1. Then mark 2½ inches from opposite points on both stars, bring opposite points together, overlapping tips until marks superimpose, and then stapling each tip at points #2. Now bring together other opposite points on both stars, and staple at points #3.

Here we use the strips, four of them bent into two-inch circles. Let their points overlap an inch, then staple at points #4.

Place a circle on each side of ornament and staple to upper and lower stars at points #5.



Pieces needed:

Three 4-pointed stars
One 8-inch square

Method of assembling:

Start folding again, this time three stars (A) (B) (C) and one square. Center the square with corners bent upward on top of star (A) and staple four corners at #1 after first flattening corners and points. Place other stars (A) and (B) back to back, and staple four corners at #2. Measure and mark three inches from tips of all points, bend opposite points until they overlap and marks superimpose, then staple down tips of stars at points #3. You now have two dome-like forms which should be centered and stapled together in the center. Gather together four tips of star (C) with wire in pin holes, then thread more wire into four corners of square on top and it's ready for hanging.

the kitchen with your husband's most treasured bottle in your hand, and at no other time can a little fine liquor do so much good—and at so little cost."

Tipsy Pudding and Jelly

Puddings and trifles have for a long, long time taken to various "drinks." Boiled custard flavored with bourbon is traditional. But these ideas are newer than new:

At a Louisville dinner party given in a regal dining room with ceilings 18 feet high, looking out past ante bellum columns toward a white-fenced meadow which might have come out of a hunting print, the dessert served from a Lowestoft bowl, was an instant chocolate pudding, into which had been stirred four tablespoons of very old bonded bourbon, and three drops of Angostura bitters. Bourbon must be added after the pudding has thickened—otherwise it will never thicken.

At a luncheon, also in Louisville, our hostess accompanied a two-year-old Kentucky salt-cured country ham with a glistening amber molded jelly. The recipe: 1 package of the new apple-flavored Jell-O, made up with $1\frac{3}{4}$ cups of hot water, $\frac{1}{4}$ cup bourbon. It could have been served as dessert.

In the Soup

Bourbon does truly embellish a great many soups, especially of the heartier variety—all kinds of bean soups, especially black bean. As a main dish for lunch, you might try this: Add one can of water to one can of Campbell's Black Bean Soup, along with one package MBT beef extract, or a bouillon cube, then add three tablespoons straight or bonded bourbon, simmer at least ten minutes. You will notice that in this recipe the bourbon goes in before the simmering, instead of afterwards, as is the case with sherry. The cooking, brief as it is, does something inexpressible in wedding the flavors.

Pass with this soup a tray of garnishes—chopped chives or parsley, lemon slices, hard-cooked eggs, the whites and yolks chopped separately.

The very same recipe and even the same accompaniments may be used with Campbell's Tomato Soup.

Louisville Brown-Hot

Those who know their way around the Blue Grass part of the world are well acquainted with this hearty hot sandwich, speciality of the Brown Hotel. A fine dish to remember during the days when roast cold turkey is likely to be handy.

To make one "hot" simply top a slice of toast with thinly sliced roast turkey or chicken—breast meat preferred. Cover with 4 tablespoons of cream sauce. (Sardi's canned cream sauce may be used.) Place two strips of crisply cooked bacon on each sandwich and sprinkle with 1 tablespoon grated Parmesan cheese. Set on an oven-proof dish and place under the broiler until the cheese melts and becomes golden brown.

Variation for the cognoscenti: Flavor cream sauce with a teaspoonful of bourbon and instead of using bacon, use in its place thinly-sliced fried country ham. It's incomparable!

Henry Bain Sauce

Within hours after arriving in Louisville, every food-minded visitor is made aware of Henry Bain sauce, a specialty of the Pendennis Club. It would be folly to come away without a bottle of the famous original, and equally foolish not to keep yourself supplied thereafter with this excellent facsimile, for which we are most grateful to Cissy Gregg of the Louisville Courier Journal.

Mix together one bottle Heinz Chili Sauce, one bottle Heinz Tomato Ketchup, one bottle A-1 Sauce, one bottle Worcestershire sauce, one 17-ounce bottle Major Grey's chutney, $\frac{1}{4}$ cup bourbon, Tabasco or Evangeline sauce to taste.

There's no work attached to the mixing, nothing to do except perhaps chop up some of the larger chunks of mango in the chutney.

Well-covered in jars or crocks, this sauce will keep indefinitely, and may be used just as it is, as an accompaniment to all sorts of meats.

But traditionally, chopped watercress, rather a lot of it, enough to make the sauce quite lumpy, is added, just before serving. If you have no watercress, parsley may be used.

Thinned with oil and vinegar, Henry Bain Sauce is considered the perfect companion for Bibb lettuce, that renowned, crisp, small-headed limestone lettuce, which is almost as famous a product of Kentucky as bourbon itself.

Perhaps the most widely known f all bourbon recipes is for bour-on balls.

They need no cooking. The doing s swift. The results are superlative. They are said to last indefinitely nd improve with age. I have no proof—at our house they disappear oo fast.

Bourbon Balls

Begin with one cup vanilla wafer rumbs (Graham crackers or other ookies may be used. They should e put into a bag and rolled fine). Place in a good-sized bowl, along with one cup chopped pecans, one up powdered sugar, two table-poons cocoa. Then add to these lry ingredients 1½ tablespoons Karo white corn syrup which has been stirred up with about ¼ cup bourbon. The mixture should be moist enough to form readily into a ball. If it isn't, another dribble of bourbon! To lend an extra aro-matic savor, moisten your hands with bourbon when making the balls. Roll balls in powdered or confectioner's sugar. Keep cool un-til ready to serve. This recipe makes at least 48—each about the size of a big aggie marble.

Bourbon Balls, handmade (and very well-made too) can be ordered from the renowned Blue Hill Kitch-ens, Inc., at Blue Hill, Maine ($1.65 postage extra), for a ½ pound box of about 30.

This "rule" is taken from Kentucky Fare, a small gem of a book written and printed by Margaret Bridwell. It is sold at Mammoth Cave and other historic Kentucky places or may be ordered by mail. Price 50¢ postpaid. Address: Margaret Bridwell, 163 Crescent Avenue, Louisville 6, Ky.

Mrs. Bridwell has shared with us a recipe which she says she intended to put into her booklet and forgot! "My grandmother made it every year and at Christmas she spooned it over ice cream. She called it:

Tutti Frutti

"In the spring when strawberries became ripe she would scald a big deep crock and put a layer of strawberries in the bottom of it—then a cup of sugar for each cup of fruit and enough bourbon to moisten it well. When peaches were ripe she added a layer of peaches and sugar and more bourbon—then cherries and raspberries, each with a like amount of sugar and more bourbon. She tied a piece of cheese-cloth over the top, covered it with a wooden lid, and except for stir-ring it once in a while, let it stand until Christmas. It was really delicious. If she had peach brandy she used it—but more often she used bourbon."

Dizzy Peaches

Bourboned peaches create more of a stir than brandied peaches. They are made in exactly the same manner. Use your own heritage recipes. Or as in present-day Kentucky households, save time and work by adding bourbon to canned whole or halved peaches:

Drain off the syrup, cook it down fast until it is reduced by ¼, then add enough bourbon to bring it up to the original volume, cover the peaches, and let stand at least one day—or much longer—in the refrigerator.

These peaches are generally served as an accompaniment to chicken, pork or ham. Or for a ceremonial dessert, in wide sherbet or coupe glasses, topped with vanilla ice cream.

One Enchanted Sherbet

Never in my experience has an impromptu dessert taken on such distinction. It was just orange sherbet acquired at the last minute from the drugstore, but it came to the table in a chilled silver bowl. A couple of spoonfuls of bourbon had been poured into a little hollow in the centre and it was all covered with chopped black walnuts.

Now anyone who has ever tried shelling and picking out the meat of black walnuts knows that this is no few-minutes job. In Kentucky, where there are a great many black walnut trees, some people have taken to scattering the nuts on their driveways, using the cars as nut crackers. Perhaps this helps. A much better suggestion is: Funsten's Eastern Black Walnuts, ready to use, vacuum-packed in four-oz. tins by the R. E. Funsten Company, St. Louis, Mo. If your grocer doesn't happen to have them, you can order them yourself directly from the manufacturer.

Browned-Butter and Bourbon Sauce

Out of Kentucky Kitchens, published by Franklin Watts, Inc., New York, a most heart-warming book that provides not only recipe treasures but a wide glimpse into Kentucky life. From it comes this pre-Civil War recipe.

Says the author, Marion Flexner, acknowledged first lady of Kentucky cuisine, "This recipe is excellent for gingerbread, cinnamon bread or plum pudding." It is also a tantalizing treat with baked apples.

Brown two tablespoons butter in a heavy skillet, add 1 cup brown sugar and ⅛ teaspoon salt. Heat until smooth. Set aside to cool. Just before serving, add 1 cup double cream whipped and 2 tablespoons bourbon or more to suit your own taste.

Spoon Bread

From Virginia comes evidence that spoon bread rises higher, has a better texture, and naturally a more interesting taste when you add to it before baking 1 or 1½ tablespoons of bourbon. For this advice we must thank Frances Parkinson Keyes, author of 32 books, fiction and otherwise, the latest a cookbook, published by Doubleday, $3.95. Try it with one of the new spoon bread mixes.

Lobster with Bourbon Sauce

In Marion Flexner's newest book, The Cocktail Supper Cookbook (M. Barrows, New York, $3.95), there is a rich, super-Newburg, seasoned with bourbon. She uses grilled lobster tails, but I find the meat juicier if the tails are simmered in the usual way. To make six generous servings, you need about two pounds (four cups) of cooked lobster meat cut into fair-sized pieces. Or you may use shrimp, crabmeat or scallops.

Make the sauce in the chafing dish at the table. Melt ½ cup butter, add a 2-oz. tin of truffles, drained and thinly sliced, or 6-oz. tin of sliced mushrooms. Season with ¼ teaspoon paprika, ¼ teaspoon Tabasco, ¼ teaspoon Worcestershire sauce, ½ teaspoon soy sauce, ½ teaspoon salt, ¼ teaspoon black pepper. Mix well. Remove from heat and add six egg yolks, which have been well-beaten or better still put in the blender along with one cup heavy cream. (If you want a less rich, less caloric dish, one cup of coffee cream may be used along with one tablespoon flour.)

Heat over hot water until the sauce is thickened, but under no circumstances let it boil, add four cups lobster meat and ¼ cup bourbon. When the dish is thoroughly warmed, taste it and add ½ teaspoon sugar, if you think it's needed. Perhaps a little more salt and pepper, or another touch of bourbon. Serve immediately.

Turkey Pot Pie, Kentucky Style

In Kentucky, and particularly in Louisville, the new and the quick have made a good marriage with an inherited gastronomy. The region has for a long time been noted for its excellent chickens and turkeys —not only the cookery but the flavor of the birds. No doubt, some of this exceptional flavor can be traced to the quality of the high protein, high vitamin poultry food which is a by-product of distilleries. A good deal of this excellent poultry is finding its way into quick-frozen pot pies made by Morton's, a local firm with national distribution. It is quite true that many an old cookbook was ransacked, and dozens of old recipes and techniques were tried before these pot pies were perfected. Most creditable, without dressing up, Morton's turkey or chicken pot pie could appear worthily at a Modern Epicure's buffet table, especially blazing with bourbon. For added interest, first you brush the top of the frozen pie with light cream, melted butter, or sour cream. Cut a small diamond out of the center, a sort of window into the bubbling juices. Heat according to package directions. Then, set fire to a little, slightly warmed 100 proof bourbon, using just about a tablespoonful for each pot pie, and pour over the pie, into the "window."

For a highly dramatic dessert—the same idea used with a Morton peach pie. Slightly warm about a quarter cup of bourbon in a small ramekin. Set fire to the liquor and pour it over each pie. If you like, you may serve bourbon-flavored Hard Sauce.

Country Hams

Almost as renowned as bourbon are the dry salt-cured country hams of Kentucky. For some time they have been almost impossible to find. Now, "a Yankee from Western Pennsylvania," has revived the ancient art of his wife's family. Appropriately in Oldham County, a few miles away from the center of Louisville, Ellis Henry and his wife each year cure and smoke a few hundred hams. They use the same methods, the same simple equipment, the same kind of smokehouses as her farmer forefathers. These hams are a connoisseur's dream, a revelation and amazement to modernists who know only the soft, young, pale-pink, sugar-cured ham of today. No brine, no chemicals, no artificial preservatives are used. The hams are rubbed with spices, bedded down in blankets of salt that glitter like snow under moonlight. When lifted from the salt, they hang for many months from the rafters of smokehouses in which smoke rises, dense and cool, out of great tubs of green hickory chips.

Not even the famous Smithfield Hams of Virginia can compare! These are superior, perhaps, because the hogs of Kentucky are fed not on peanuts, but on corn. This corn is said to make the meat firmer, less oily.

Time and climate are factors too. Kentucky country hams must be touched by frost—not once but twice. They are considered fit to eat only after at least twelve months and the good hard frost of two autumns.

When ready, the ham takes on a polished mahogany hue. The surface is wavy, softly dimpled where the meat has shrunk away from the rind and the texture is close and firm. Some people of European background serve these hams without cooking them, slicing them "so thin you can see through," just like Westphalian ham or Italian prosciutto, a type of ham.

A true Kentuckian, however, cooks his ham and considers it a desecration to bake anything less than the whole ham. "When you cut into it, you lose the juices." From as far away as Bogota in South America, Iran and Hawaii, initiates order their country hams by the pair—one ham to slice for frying and one to bake.

New Ways with Old Ham

In most present-day households, the complications, equipment and space required for preparing a whole ham are formidable. Buying the ham ready-cooked is one answer, but the Ellis Henrys sell no cooked hams. They will share with you, however, a new method, so easy that anybody, anywhere, can do it. And you don't need that big old wash boiler anymore. Heavy duty aluminum freezer foil is the secret—and a thermostatically controlled oven.

Scrub the ham and soak in water overnight. Place a large piece of aluminum foil on top of a pan big enough to hold your ham, place the ham on the foil and pour over it 2½ cups of water, ½ cup bourbon, 2 cups brown sugar, wrap ham in foil and if you like add a lid, too. Place in a very slow oven, 250° to 275° F. Forget it for five or six hours. When it feels tender to the fork, when the bones protrude a little, and the rind lifts off easily, your ham is done. Unless you want to use it immediately, the ham is generally left to cool in its wrappings. Then the rind is removed.

Glaze the top with fine bread crumbs or coarse water-ground corn meal, mixed half and half with old-fashioned dark brown sugar, patting the mixture well over the top. Brown at 375° to 400° F. until the sugar is bubbly and a crust forms. If you want to anoint the meat with a most exquisite aromatic flavor, baste from time to time with a little bourbon. Such a ham should never be served hot, nor should it be stone cold, but "at proper room temperature, like a great Burgundy wine." The slices should be always paper thin. Serve with hot or beaten biscuits.

Complete details about keeping, cooking, carving and serving country hams will come to you—along with the ham itself from Old Hickory Farm, Peewee Valley, Oldham County, Kentucky. There are so few of these hams that they cannot be sold in stores, but may be mail-ordered and will be shipped parcel-post or express, C.O.D. They range from 12 to 16 lbs. and the price is moderate, $1.16 per pound, plus shipping charges.

for a beauty parade in the 1919 Ziegfeld Follies. The song stepped out to become the "theme" of every fashion and beauty parade over the years. As well-rounded a score as Annie Get Your Gun included an incidental "production" number, There's No Business Like Show Business, which has become the "theme" song of the business there is no business like. Berlin's Easter Parade was a dud in the 1933 production of As Thousands Cheer—in fact, the songsmith recalls that the score was panned unmercifully as "undistinguished"—and yet this, too, has long survived as a seasonal song. The same was true of Heat Wave, another excerpt from the same Music Box Revue.

For the reason that The Student Prince has probably been performed more than any other operetta in the world, this ranks with The Merry Widow as a perennial favorite. There was a show biz axiom that "the sun never sets on a Student Prince company" and this 1924 Romberg operetta, too, with its memorable Drinking Song, Deep in My Heart, Dear and Serenade, belongs in the all-time perennials as does Blossom Time. The latter was based on the life and works of Franz Schubert, so Romberg "leaned strongly" on Schubert!

Rudolph Friml's Rose Marie is another of those well-rounded operettas whose appeal went around the world, both via song and in actual production. The title song was to prove a cinematic highlight in the future celluloid careers of Jeanette MacDonald and Nelson Eddy as he doughtily serenaded her with this and other Otto Harbach and Oscar Hammerstein II lyrics, such as Indian Love Call, all set to Friml's melodies. Harbach, himself the dean of American librettists, started with Karl Hoschna's Madame Sherry (Every Little Movement Has a Meaning All Its Own) and has collaborated over the years with composers like Vincent Youmans, Louis A. Hirsch, Kern, Romberg and Gershwin—as diverse a galaxy of song stylists as any librettist would want or care for.

JEROME KERN is the Broadway composer's composer. Irving Berlin has openly expressed the wish he "could write melodies like Jerry Kern." With Guy Bolton and P. G. Wodehouse, his intimate musicals for the now defunct Princess Theater on New York's 39th Street were milestones in the evolution of American musical comedy. Leave It to Jane, Sally, The Girl from Utah, Very Good Eddie, The Cat and the Fiddle, Roberta, Music in the Air, Sweet Adeline are signal credits to a tuneful and melodic composer, but his Show Boat, the Oscar Hammerstein II adaptation from Edna Ferber's novel, remains his most signal achievement with such immortal excerpts as Ol' Man River, Only Make Believe, Can't Help Lovin' That Man, You Are Love and Why Do I Love You? And not forgetting Bill, an "interpolated" lyric by P. G. Wodehouse of the same Bolton-Wodehouse-Kern triumvirate in the World War I era, which the incomparable Helen Morgan sang so memorably.

George Gershwin has been generally conceded "the composer of our times who will be remembered 100 years from now." It will not be for Swanee (1919), perhaps his only real "popular" hit, but it will be for the Rhapsody in Blue (1925) and more likely for the American folk opera Porgy and Bess (1935) based on the Dorothy and DuBose Heyward play and novel, Porgy, with its haunting Summertime, lachrymose Bess, You Is My Woman, sentimental A Woman Is a Sometime Thing, spirited I Got Plenty O'Nuttin' and It Ain't Necessarily So. Gershwin's Of Thee I Sing! was the first Broadway musical to win a Pulitzer prize, and his I Got Rhythm for Ethel Merman, in Girl Crazy, is that song stylist's trademark number to this day.

MUSICAL comedy, per se, by the very nature of the nomenclature becomes memorable for performance as well as the basic material. Victor Moore's singing of the song Wintergreen for President may be remembered more than the fact Of Thee I Sing! was the first musical comedy to win a Pulitzer prize, or that George Gershwin, George S. Kaufman and Morrie Ryskind wrote it. Helen Morgan's wistful Bill, Fritzi Scheff's Kiss Me Again, Ezio Pinza's Some Enchanted Evening, Tamara's Smoke Gets in Your Eyes are other examples. Mary Martin's My Heart Belongs to Daddy and later I'm Gonna Wash That Man Right Out of My Hair, Julia Sanderson's They Didn't Believe Me—these are memorable songs, sung with unique style, which endure far beyond their original sources.

The Musical Comedy Hit Parade is as rich as one's own memories. It is full of association of ideas, association of emotion. Records now make it possible to aid one's memory to call up ideas and emotion—in short, to enjoy again the pleasant and often thrilling music of the Broadway musical comedy. Many are the favorite songs which you meet again on records in their original setting within the show.

There are two ways of enjoying musical comedies on records. First, the so-called "original cast" albums, usually recorded very soon after the New York première. These albums bring back an evening which has delighted you. And if you weren't there, then the album transports you to Broadway, at least in sound. In contrast to original cast recordings we have the productions made especially for records.

These are frequently made with all-star casts and excellent musical direction; such casts are lavished particularly on the more durable—or shall I say "classical"?—of our operettas. Here you find such standbys as Porgy and Bess, The Student Prince and Carousel.

HOW TO LEAVE HOME AND LIKE IT

Utah, Squaw Valley near Lake Tahoe in California, Pico, Stowe and Bromley in Vermont, Pinkham Notch, Cannon Mountain, and Cranmore Mountain in New Hampshire, and Lake Placid and Whiteface Mountain in New York.

BESIDES the famous Laurentians, Canada has excellent skiing from coast to coast. One of the resorts that would intrigue us most if we were bitten by the Alpine mountaineering ski bug would be Banff in the Rockies, where the powder snow is said to lie 20 feet deep. While Banff's Mount Norquay, is championship stuff (its 3,240-foot chair-lift rises a vertical 1,300 feet, is the world's steepest), its lower slopes are suitable for beginners, and some of Canada's finest instructors operate here. You can reach Banff by Canadian Pacific train or Trans-Canada plane to Calgary. The eighty-five miles to Banff are covered by Western Canada Greyhound bus over roads which are meticulously kept open all winter, like all the other arteries to ski resorts in Canada.

Trois Rivières (Three Rivers) between Quebec and Montreal attracts an enthusiastic clan of jumpers. And the area known as the Eastern Townships, which is right over the line from Vermont and includes Sherbrooke, Hillcrest-North Hatley, Mount Orford, Mount Giroux and Sutton Mountain, offers such a variety of slopes and trails that the sissies can ski here as happily as the experts.

Indeed, you may ski quite inexpensively and pleasurably if not too thrillingly within the city of Montreal in the Botanical Gardens or in Mount Royal Park. The nearby Côte-des-Neiges jumping hill is nothing to sneeze at, since many championship meets are held here.

On a winter visit to Quebec you can: ski politely in the city on the historic Plains of Abraham (renting skis and equipment at very little cost); or ski more ambitiously no more than 12 miles out of town on the slopes of Mont St. Cassin at Lac Beauport; or on the famous hills around Valcartier, 18 miles out of town near the Quebec airport; or, 25 miles away near the shrine of Ste. Anne de Beaupre, you can slalom or jump as spectacularly as you are able on Mont Ste. Anne—providing you are able.

The Laurentians, Canada's most renowned skiing territory, are the mountains north of Montreal, and are generally conceded to be excellent all-round grounds for all grades of skiers. The famous ski centers are in fact a string of quaint French-Canadian towns on or close to Highway 11 and served also by both Canadian Pacific and Canadian National railways. You've probably heard their names before—Shawbridge, Piedmont, St. Sauveur, Mont Rolland, Ste. Adele, Ste. Marguerite, Lac Masson, Val Morin, Val David, Ste. Agathe, Trout Lake, St. Donat, Ivry, St. Faustin, St. Jovite and Mont Tremblant. The open slopes that surround these small towns are encouraging territory for beginners, while the heights (the 90-mile area has something over 60 tows) are Mecca for experts. Moreover, some of the world's best instruction is available here for both novice and veteran. Accommodations run the gamut from rustic dormitories to plushy suites, from boarding house simplicity to resort-hotel luxury. You can pay anything from $2 to $12 a day for a room, but the color of the place is priceless. Where else could you see a priest in his cassock doing his parish rounds on skis?

BACK to the USA, never have we heard higher praise of any skiing than from the aficionados of Squaw Mountain, scheduled to be the scene of the 1960 Winter Olympics. Its ski lift is the longest in the world. To get here, you can fly from San Francisco over the High Sierras to Reno. Or by train you go to Truckee, via Southern Pacific from San Francisco, or via Union Pacific and Northwestern from Chicago.

Sun Valley, the most ambitious and probably the most complete skiing resort in the country, offers skiing and accommodations on all levels of expertness and pocketbook. And so far as one of our ski-happy editors is concerned it has passed this rigorous test for excellence of operation and management: During a three-week stay he sampled every kind of accommodation from a sundeck suite in the Lodge to a $3 a day dormitory bed in the Chalet. He declares he found standards of service and hospitality uniformly topnotch, whether high-priced or low. And when he went to have his sprained ankle strapped, ho should be sitting next to him the doctor's office but Claudette olbert!

Many of the resorts, Sun Valley ncluded, offer special rates for ertain "Learn to Ski" weeks, hich include accommodations for days and 6 nights, plus meals, aily ski lessons, use of lifts and articipation in the social goingsn.

Railroads invariably run special ki excursion trains and airlines un ski flights to New York, Vernont and Laurentian resorts, alhough most of this year's sched-les have not yet been announced
s this is being written.

Colonial Airlines will be running 7-day all-expense trip from New ork to Ste. Agathe, Ste. Maruerite or St. Donat, costing about 90. Trans-Canada Airlines will ndoubtedly be offering a similar ype of junket. And for week-end kiers Colonial will be flying to he Stowe area of Vermont, proiding ground transportation from he Burlington airport to Stowe.
First-class flight together with otel accommodations and includng meals, should run to about $40.

Vermont, meanwhile, is doing omething constructive about makng it possible for whole families, oung and old, to take skiing vaations together without having to reak the bank or mortgage the ouse to pay for sitters. Small, inormal skiing centers are growing p as at Pine Top in South Vernon nd in East Jamaica at the Sugarush Ski Tow. Accommodations re inexpensive, informal, boarding ouse or cottage style, with no fan-are, but plenty of opportunity for he littlest to learn how while the lder ones still enjoy themselves.

Your travel agent is a natural onsultant when it comes to unraveling the problem of which ski dreds there are to choose from.

Many a regal and exotic banquet could be planned around the foods of America, such delicacies as diamond-back terrapin, canvas-back and Muscovy ducks, ruffed grouse, wild rice, guavas and papayas. But the meal we have in mind is a simple informal buffet—an almost tossed-together supper, with left-over turkey and gravy the starting point.

Vegetables as well as the breadstuff of the meal are an integral part of the main dish—a Colonial corn pie whose antecedents may be traced back to the batter breads of Virginia and the many crust-topped casseroles that take the name of "pie" in the Carolinas and other southern states.

Supper begins with canned-condensed or frozen clam chowder (Cross & Blackwell's or Campbell's), considerably enhanced by the addition of more clams and a garnish of Italian onions cut on a slicer so thin that they are no more than an echo of onions.

Then corn pie studded with kernels, flecked with pimiento and parsley—brown gravy bubbling up richly around the edges of the baking dish.

THE mold of tomato aspic is also a miracle thing, for it comes all ready jelled in tins. For the most hurried moments, you have only to turn it out of the cans and slice into rings. But a fancy mold is ever so easy to do. Just melt the aspic, pour into mold, place in the refrigerator. As soon as it reaches room temperature, it will set. Gherkins surround the salad for color, flavor and texture contrast. And the dressing is a triumph, a combination of mashed avocado combined with bottled Durkee's dressing.

Brazil nut chips in a golden mesh basket are not just a frill but an integral part of the meal. They might well be scattered over the clam chowder or served with the tomato aspic or used as a garnish on the blueberry tarts served for dessert.

Small mugs of hot chocolate will be served later—quite a bit later. Have the chocolate frothed high in the Mexican manner. (It's done in your electric blender.) Cut down the sweet and deepen the richness of the chocolate with the addition of instant coffee. Lend mystery with the slightest stardusting of powdered allspice.

A Fast Bowl of Chowder

Both the round clam or quahog chowder clam and also the soft shell clam are American. From time immemorial they were used by the Indians. In Tobago, the so-called Robinson Crusoe Island there have been discovered immense accumulations of clam shells along with bowls and utensils dating back to the Stone Age. When the clam teams with potato, you have a dish which is, on at least two counts, aboriginal.

Controversy between those who favor tomatoes and those who insist upon milk for their clam chowder has raged for centuries. For years the best known canners veered toward Manhattan style. Some have begged the question. You can add to them either milk, tomato or tomato soup. But the new condensed quick-frozen clam chowders are in the best New England milk tradition and extraordinarily well made.

Little is needed to lift them into the realm of the epicure, except perhaps an added dash of Worcestershire. But we like to add to each two cans of frozen clam chowder, an extra 7-ounce can of clams, either whole or minced. (We like Pioneer Brand.)

Garnishes are important. Rather a lot of chopped parsley or chives. Lacking fresh chives, Spice Islands or House of Herbs chopped green onion tops would be admirable. Coarsely crumbled crisp bacon, well flavored and smoky, is excellent too. A true inspiration is a crisp, sliced Italian onion with its streaks of Tyrian purple, its sweet, delicate taste. Slice thin enough to float. An exciting sight in an antique ironstone tureen or one of blue Meissen. (Did you know that you can now get authentic reproductions of Meissen?)

The palest mealy biscuits—Keebler's sea-biscuits, pilot crackers, Bent's water-biscuits split and lightly toasted, Trenton crackers or oysterettes—are classic accompaniments to chowder.

Grain of the Gods

When Ruth gleaned amidst the alien corn in the fields of Boaz, it may have been wheat, barley, rye or millet, for corn was a word applied to all sorts of grain. But her "alien corn" could not have been ours. None in the ancient Biblical world knew our maize, though there is every reason to believe that it was developed and cultivated by the pre-Incan races of Peru fully three or four thousand years ago.

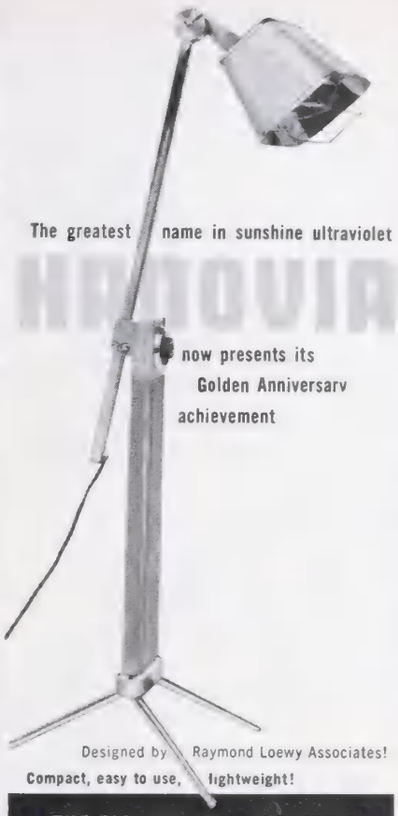
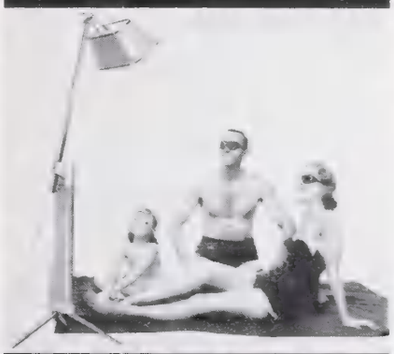
Whether corn originated in Peru or in Central America or Mexico has not been established. Even the Incas had forgotten its history. The Indians called it "the gift from the gods."

According to some, a spirit woman once walked across their land and wherever she stepped, corn and pumpkins grew. A Navajo legend describes an enormous turkey hen that flew across the country and dropped one ear of blue corn from beneath her wing.



Among the Aztecs, Mayas and Incas, corn was regarded with great reverence. To them, literally, it was the breath of life. Their entire civilization, their very existence and accomplishments were directly and indirectly dependent upon a staple food crop.

Our own civilization, the conquest and settlement of our country was largely made possible by maize. The English colonists of Jamestown, the Pilgrims of Plymouth, the pioneers who pushed westward across the Alleghenies would have starved without it. There are those who say that if the Indians could have foreseen the future they might have been wise to burn their corn. But instead they taught the colonists to plant, to cultivate, to harvest and to prepare it.



With all our vaunted inventive genius we have been able during the centuries to discover only two methods of preparing corn that were not known to the Indians ages and ages before Columbus—corn flakes and canning. We are still beholden to the Indians for corn on the cob, popcorn, big hominy and grits, corn pudding, stewed corn, corn bread, pone, mush and johnnycake.

Since the day when Columbus returned from the West Indies to Spain and showed his queen a handful of the strange hard golden kernels used as food, corn has changed the face of the world. It has altered the fate and the food habits of men from Australia to New Zealand, through Africa and the Philippines, from Java, China and Japan to the Steppes of Siberia.

Yet only the English call it by its proper name "Indian corn." In Holland and Hungary, it is named Turkish wheat. In France, they called it Spanish corn. The Turks call it Egyptian. The Egyptians name it Syrian, and the South Africans say "mealies."

Colonial Corn Pie

There are certain dishes like a turkey hash traditionally served at the St. Cecelia ball in Charleston, so outstanding that although they require roast turkey and turkey gravy nobody ever thinks of them as "leftovers." In many of the old-time households, whole turkeys were roasted to make them. The Colonial corn pie starring in our New World menus on page 157 belongs to this category. In our versatile present-day setup you could, if you wish, use canned turkey or chicken and also canned gravy brightened, perhaps, with a dash of lemon juice and a little extra seasoning. Our recipe makes six servings. For the party version illustrated, we doubled it.

Combine in a mixing bowl one #303 can of corn kernels. Use the liquid too. Add 1 tablespoon chopped parsley, fresh or dried; ⅓ cup evaporated milk or heavy cream. (Strangely enough, evaporated milk in this recipe gives a richer flavor.) Add 2 egg yolks, a 12-ounce package prepared corn muffin mix, 1 tablespoon chopped pimiento, 1½ teaspoons onion salt, 3 or 4 drops Tabasco sauce. Stir all this together, but not too conscientiously. It doesn't matter at all if the batter is a little lumpy. Now fold in 2 stiffly beaten egg whites.

Butter a shallow baking dish—your most attractive, naturally. Place in it a layer of sliced or coarsely cut-up cooked turkey and add just enough gravy to cover the bottom of the dish. Place the batter by the spoonful over the turkey. Bake in a moderate oven, 350° F., 25 to 30 minutes or until the crust is firm, lusciously golden brown and does not show a press mark when you touch it. Serve from the baking dish. Extra gravy on hand, if you think it's needed!

In certain parts of the country, you will find packaged corn muffin mix unsweetened and made of white corn meal in the most approved Southern manner. Excellent for our Colonial Corn Pie. However, since it comes in 15-ounce rather than 12-ounce packages, add an extra egg and increase the evaporated milk from ⅓ to ½ cup.

Love Apple and Nightshade

Between the pimiento and the pimento there is a natural confusion. Both the pimiento spelled with an extra "i" and pimento without an "i," are New World foods. The first refers to a large family of vegetable peppers, sweet and hot; the second, to the allspice berry native to Jamaica.

Tomatoes, potatoes, sweet bell and hot chili peppers—don't seem to be related. But they are—all Americans belonging to the big nightshade family some of whose members are, literally, deadly.

In Newport, R. I., there is a statue to a brave gentleman in the 1850's who first dared to bite into a love apple—found it tasty and felt just fine. He has been hailed as the discoverer of the tomato. In truth he was a rediscoverer only a few hundred years late. The Peruvians and Mexicans had esteemed it many centuries ago.

The tomato, however, is one of the few fruit plants cultivated by ancient races of America which has been enormously improved by our horticulturists. The tomato product has been the greatest challenge and certainly one of the outstanding achievements of modern processing. One of the less-known triumphs is a ready-to-serve tomato aspic made from pectins instead of gelatin. It sets, and stays set, at room temperatures.

Because of the lamentable quality of so called fresh tomatoes on the market during the winter months, this canned aspic should acquire great popularity. Certainly the flavor is many degrees closer to the real thing. Nothing need be added except, if you like, a bit of fresh, finely chopped basil or hot pepper sauce or celery seed.

A garnish of gherkins is authentic Americana, for, though the cucumber was known to the Greeks, gherkins came first from the West Indies.

Avocado Dressing on the Half Shell

The French word for lawyer (avocat), the Incan word for shell have left their traces in the name of this fruit which began as aguacote and is now quite popularly called avocado. On the pottery and in the sculpture of tribes immeasurably old, we find it pictured. And in the supermarkets, even in middle-size towns, we find it displayed. Only recently have we begun to realize its endless possibilities, not only in salad, but as an appetizer, in soups and as a garnish for fish and meat dishes.

Nature has provided a most appropriate and picturesque serving piece for an avocado dressing—its own scooped shell. To keep it solid, do not remove the last half inch. Mash pulp with a silver fork and combine with an equal quantity of Durkee's dressing. Pile into the shell and provide a spoon—that's all. One of the best salad dressings imaginable and strangely enough it doesn't darken.

Nuts of America

"Probably no other race on earth is quite so nutty literally, even if not figuratively speaking, as we." We quote a distinguished naturalist, A. Hyatt Verrill. He lists among our own native nuts the common chestnut, chinquapins, hickory, pecan, peanuts, black walnut, butternut, wild filberts, beechnut, cashew, monkey, Brazil, paradise and souri nuts.

If you feel in the mood for a benign bit of chauvinistic whimsey, it might be amusing to serve an American medley. Nothing could be more appropriate as a cocktail accompaniment, nor more "patriotic" from a hemispheric point of view, especially if you include pepitas, the dried and salted seeds of pumpkin.

A great variety of salted nut specialties is available, but the best of them all in my private opinion must still be made at home. These are Brazil nut chips.

Brazil Nut Chips

First shell your nuts. There is a new, easy and neat way to do this. Place the nuts in a saucepan, cover with cold water, bring to a boil and cook uncovered three minutes. Drain. Once again cover with cold water and let stand one minute. Drain again and you'll find the nuts will crack with the greatest of ease and the kernels will remain whole and crunchy.

Now to slice the nuts: Cover 1½ cups shelled whole Brazil nuts with cold water. Bring slowly to a boil, simmer two or three minutes, drain and cut lengthwise into thin slices, just about ⅛ inch thick. A vegetable peeler or bean cutting gadget is helpful. Spread slices thinly on a shallow buttered pan. Dot with 2 tablespoons of butter, sprinkle with about 1 teaspoon of salt. Sea salt or Malden salt crystals are most flavorful. Bake in moderate oven 350° F. about 12 minutes. Stir two or three times. Watch like a hawk, for they burn easily.

Stored well-covered in the refrigerator, Brazil nut chips keep fresh for many weeks. They are best if warmed and crisped briefly before serving.

The True Berry

Arguments have raged for generations around the huckleberry and the blueberry. Which is true? And which is blue? And which is which? Even the scholars find the answers difficult. For among these two native Americans there are several blueberries so dark that they are almost black and certain huckleberries that are distinctly blue. The essential difference seems to be in the seeds. The blueberry has a number of seeds so fine that they are often almost undiscernible, especially in the cultivated varieties. The huckleberry on the other hand has ten fairly large seeds and usually does not grow to as large a size as the blueberry.

A European visitor last year confessed herself dazzled by our Tru-Blu Berries, "so huge, so sweet, so juicy and beautiful, such a splendid rich, deep-mauve color. And when they are served with your thick, white sour cream—well, in any other country in the world, it would be to rave . . . Fraises de bois and crême fraîche in Paris are wonderful, of course, but with American big blueberries and your delicatessen sour cream, there is no comparison."

Blueberry Tarts

Goaded by such praise, we suggest for dessert blueberry tarts in homemade or bakery-shop shells. A spoonful of cream cheese smoothed with sour cream slightly sweetened may be placed in the bottom of each shell and the berries topped lightly or lavishly with more cream.

For many such occasions, a supply of baked tart shells may be kept in the freezer, heated a few minutes as needed.

Instead of tart shells, Mary Annes (hollowed sponge cake cases) would do fine, particularly if they are sprinkled but not soaked, with a few drops of bourbon or rum.

Well-drained, canned or frozen berries or preserves can be substituted for fresh. Or, perhaps, you will choose blackberries for they, too, are American.

The Emperor's Cup

When the conquering Cortez came to the court of Montezuma, he found the Emperor and his nobles drinking strange beverages of a deep earth color. At first the Spaniards did not like the bitter cacao made from dried and roasted seeds, boiled in water like coffee, but they took kindly to the thicker chocolate, sweetened with honey and flavored with spices and vanilla. In short order the chocolate habit spread to and through Europe. The authentic Mexican chocolate probably quite similar in taste to that served for breakfast to the Emperor behind his screen of beaten gold is not a simple thing to make. In Mexico it is still prepared with long, carved molinillos that whip into a steaming froth, small spice-scented cakes melted in hot water. An original recipe calls for two pounds of Soconusco and one pound of Caracas cocoa beans to be hand-ground and warmed, combined with nuts, shaped into little balls, patted into pancakes, cooled on a board, each wrapped separately in tissue paper and stored in glass jars.

Here is a remarkably similar version made with instant chocolate frothed by a blender instead of a molinillo.

Chocolate for Three

Place in blender 1 whole egg, 4 tablespoons instant chocolate or cocoa mix, 3 level teaspoons instant coffee, ¼ teaspoon powdered allspice. (This is the pimento berry of Jamaica which by some alchemy of nature seems to combine the tastes of cinnamon, nutmeg and clove.) Blend about ten seconds.

Add an inch or two of Spice Islands vanilla bean or 1 teaspoon pure vanilla extract to three cups milk, scald, and add gradually to the blender contents. Keep your hand on the cover to avoid a splash-over. Blend until frothy and pour back into the pan to keep hot.

For an historic Aztec touch, add to each cup a sprinkle of toasted, finely slivered or coarsely chopped toasted peanuts.

THE TRUE AMERICAN SPIRIT

World grain. Only bourbon can be called our own, our native spirit, made of American corn.

About the rich and eventful history of bourbon there is not much unanimity but most authorities agree that the first bourbon worthy of the name was produced at the woolen mill of the Rev. Elijah Craig in Georgetown, Kentucky in 1789.

Why should a man of God turn to the making of drinking spirit and why of all places in far away Kentucky, which in those days was the end of the world? Because—corn grew tall in the lush new land and it took a long time; cost a great deal to transport grain to market in its natural state. Barrels and demijohns of bourbon were another matter. They did not spoil and were immensely salable—at a nice profit.

Moreover a ridge of limestone rock that began in Maryland and Virginia and ran through Indiana, had its finest outcropping in Kentucky where the white oaks grew to make the barrels, and the water sometimes almost milky with lime, tumbled down the hillsides from innumerable springs to cook the mash, to cool the vapors and the stills.

Ask a Kentucky connoisseur the secret of great bourbon, and he will probably answer there are five. "The first is water, the second is water, the third is water, the fourth our gosh-awful climate, and fifth our inheritance—our yeast and our methods." Some traditionalists will add, "the congenerics in the air," certain mysterious factors which give to bourbon as they do to wine or cognac a special regional flavor.

According to the United States standards of identity, bourbon is a distilled beverage—distilled at not more than 160 proof from a fermented mixture, call it mash, which must contain at least 51 per cent and not more than 79 per cent of corn. If 80 per cent or more corn is used you will have not bourbon but corn whiskey. To become bourbon a whiskey must be stored and aged not less than 24 calendar months, in new, unused oak barrels that have been charred.

Many a whiskey might contain the required amount of corn, they might have been distilled at the required proof, and aged as long and in the same way, but unless each batch has been made and bottled singly like the wine from a single vineyard, it cannot be called a true bourbon. Sometimes one such whiskey is combined with another. This makes "a blend of straight whiskeys." Sometimes it is mixed with neutral spirits of grain to become a "blended whiskey." When most people say bourbon, they mean straight bourbon. But just to confuse you a little, straight bourbon is often used to refer to that which is 86 proof (contains 43 per cent alcohol as contrasted with bonded bourbon which is 100 proof, 50 per cent alcohol.)

As might be gathered from the above examples of simple division by two, proof is nothing mysterious. It has nothing to do with quality. It simply refers to the percentage of alcohol. A bottle marked 100 proof is half alcohol by volume. The rest of the liquid in the bottle is distilled or in many cases, demineralized or ionized water which is freed of impurities but retains the natural taste. Flavors or coloring may not be added or artificially removed from a real bourbon.

The Bonds

Bottled-in-bond has always had an aristocratic sound but actually it is a government designation meaning that in addition to being a true bourbon distilled at the proper proof and aged in the right kind of barrels, it must be kept under government supervision, remain in those barrels not merely two, but at least 4 years—and not more than 8 years. It must be the product of the same distillery, made by the same distiller and in a single season either spring or fall of the same year. It must be bottled at 100 proof, no more, no less. The barrels can not have been moved from their own bonded warehouse.

Nevertheless bottled-in-bond is not a guarantee of goodness but of alcoholic strength. Nor are bonds more desirable than straights. Some bourbons achieve perfection at one proof, some at another. Some collectors items are 86 proof, some are 90, others are 101. Which is best depends on the bourbon, also upon your own liking.

For sipping neat with branch water as a chaser—the way a true Kentuckian takes it—bonded bourbon is considered "a touch forceful." As one lady put it, "a little bruising but not unpleasant. Like being kissed hard on the mouth."

For highballs, bonded bourbon is fine but can be confusing. A jigger of bonded bourbon because of its higher alcoholic content needs to be treated more respectfully and used more sparingly. Recently there has been a well-defined trend toward 86 proof, straight bourbons. Many of the great names are being bottled both as straights and in bond.

Original Sour Mash

Many a verbal duel has been fought over the relative merit of sour versus sweet mash bourbon. There are nostalgic proponents of old ways who will tell you that the phrase "sour mash" on a bourbon label is as meaningful as the sterling mark on silver. Yet many present-day bourbons entitled to use that phrase now omit it from their labels and advertising because, according to recent surveys, "The younger generation doesn't like the sound of it."

The traditionalists will tell you in no uncertain terms that sour mash makes sweet whiskey. Sweet in this case has no relation to sugary. It means mellow, ripe, true to taste.

In order to use the term "sour mash," a part of the already distilled mash from the previous run is added together with fresh yeast to the new mash. The fermentation for sour mash is longer by at least 24 hours, and the cypress tubs must be allowed to stand empty to "sweeten" in the air for 48 hours between batches. Since the time required is longer, the sour mash process is necessarily more expensive.

Sour mash is heritage whiskey in every sense of the word. Like fine wines, cognac and rums it is dependent upon inherited skills and techniques. But it is not merely the land, the physical plant and formulae that are handed down. There are definite physical "things" like jugs of yeast that have been nurtured, constantly used and renewed. The earliest distillers, we are told, often set their tubs under a grape arbor or a peach tree to catch the wild yeast. It was essentially the same method used to make salt-rising bread or the starter for sourdough and buckwheat cakes. Jugs of yeast were kept in distillers' families for generations, carefully locked away in spring houses or "tied to the end of a rope and let down the well."

Not only through the yeast but because of the sour mash method which is generally standard practice in Kentucky, there is a definite link from week to week, from season to season, from year to year. The "chain" of the great bourbons is never broken. Each bottle is related to all the others that came before and are to come afterwards.

That Old, Old Question

As part of our editorial research we took a tasting trip to Kentucky and one after the other we asked at least twenty experts this question, "Disregarding price and all other economic factors, just what would you say is the right age for a bourbon to be?"

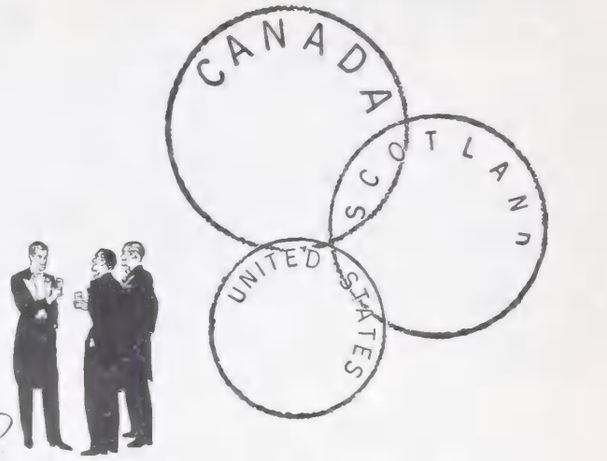
Each one gave a different answer. One summed it up. "It's not a fair question . . . like asking at what age is a woman most beautiful? All depends on the woman and your own likes. Or your own dislikes!"

An old-fashioned, full-bodied whiskey distilled at comparatively low proof with plenty of the flavor esters left in it, will mature more slowly and can take age more gracefully than the lighter bourbons. The temperatures at which the whiskey is kept whether in open rick "sheds" subject to the summer's heat and winter's cold, or carefully controlled air-conditioned warehouses—make a big difference. In the old days distillers often referred to their whiskey as a certain number of summers old rather than by the age in years. For it has long been known that as far as whiskey is concerned, time stands still in cold weather. In certain air-conditioned brick warehouses it is always summertime but with certain fluctuations comparable to cool mornings and nights. For bourbons seem to be susceptible to variations of temperature as well as breezes and draughts.

All things considered, one bourbon may achieve its peak of perfection at 4½ years, another at 6 or 8 and in a few instances perhaps not until 10. One thing to remember: Unlike wine, bourbon does not age in the bottle but only in the barrel, so that a 6-year-old bourbon kept a dozen years on the shelf is still 6 years old to taste.

No matter who says what, aging can never make a poor whiskey good, or a mediocre, great. But it can bring out the best—deepen and emphasize its qualities.

Kept too long in the barrel however, it becomes woody and even a little bitter.



And So to Drink

As for the way of a man—or a woman—with bourbon there are no set rules. It is agreed that "fine bourbon deserves a lot of respect." If you don't sip it straight accompanied by a cool but not iced water you may still be received into the Inner Circle by diluting your bourbon half and half with water as the professional tasters do. Or, you may take it on rocks, or over crushed ice as a bourbon mist but you must realize that extreme cold lowers the sensitivity of the palate and represses certain subtleties of flavor and a great deal of aroma.

Some great bourbons deserve an inhaler and the ceremony of being warmed in the hands like a fine cognac.

Sparkling water is not usually considered as compatible as is plain tap, branch, creek or spring water. Ginger ale or any other mixer I have heard called "an affront to good liquor." Who is to say?

Certain salted tidbits, particularly nuts like pecans or cashews bring out the best quality in bourbon. Plain crackers are good for clearing the taste and so is bread with or without some simple cheese but "rich, highly seasoned hors d'oeuvres are the worst things you can serve, if you want to bring out a fine bourbon whiskey."

A Blender Julep

No one with any sense of caution should enter the julep controversy. Only one thing is agreed: The julep is the king of all bourbon drinks. Even among those who frown on all mixed drinks, a julep is accepted. Here agreement ends. Some families from time immemorial have been muddlers of their mint and others, pressers. Some insist that ice must be shaved from a great block with a special shaver. Others say that only a wooden mallet and a heavy canvas bag will produce ice that is both fine and dry enough. Some insist on sipping from the mug, and others use a straw. Some frost the whole drink beforehand and others merely the ice-filled beaker. If you have hereditary or personal leanings, nothing will change you.

But to those who are still open-minded, we suggest this amazingly simple and thoroughly effective recipe which uses a blender. We hasten to say that it has been approved by solid Kentuckians.

For each julep remove the leaves from 2 sprigs of fresh mint and place in a blender along with 1 tablespoon of water, and ½ to 1 teaspoon powdered sugar. (Not frosting sugar but the kind you use for iced tea and berries.) Blend until the leaves have disappeared, then add a small handful of ice and a jigger (that's 3 tablespoons) of bonded bourbon. Blend a few seconds longer and pour into heavily frosted glasses or julep cups that have been filled with finely chopped or shaved ice. Stir and decorate with a generous bouquet of fresh mint which may or may not be powdered with a little sugar. Provide a straw—and this is important—snip the straw with scissors so that it is no taller than the mint. Then, and only then, can the nose be properly "pleasured."

The right beaker is a matter much discussed. Generally, in advertisements, juleps are shown in tall, tapered bumpers. This is a latter-day innovation of English silversmiths. The original and traditional Kentucky julep cup was of silver without handle, very little decoration if any, and not quite as tall as an old-fashioned water tumbler. It held about eight ounces, and was often beaten from solid silver coins by local craftsmen, the most famous of whom was Asa Blanchard of Louisville. Present-day versions in sterling and in heavy plated silver almost indistinguishable from rare and expensive Blanchards are now being made by a number of companies including International, Reed and Barton, Munt, Gorham, Kirk and Robert Ensko.

The Borning Cup

An inscribed silver julep mug has solved gift problems in Kentucky and Virginia for generations. In many families it is a "borning gift," a christening present to a newborn child. For birthdays, Christmas, graduations, another cup is given, so that even at 18 or 21 a young person has a respectable array for a new household. A delightful custom! An inspiration to fathers and mothers, aunts, uncles and godparents!

They are useful not only for drinks but to hold small bouquets, or cigarettes. Very stylish in bathrooms or to take along with you on your travels.

To Be a Judge

In Kentucky there is no higher praise for any man than to be called "a gentleman, a scholar, and a judge of good whiskey." Women have rarely been known for their bourbon discernment. So it was slightly surprising to learn that at the Park and Tilford distillery where more than two hundred tests are run each day in the Quality Control laboratories women tasters consistently show a higher rating—5 to 10 per cent better than that of men.

One of the best-known professional bourbon tasters in Louisville—and the world for that matter—is a woman, Marge Plamp of Brown-Forman, a small attractive young woman with glinting brown eyes, a soft drawl and a dry humor. Her palate is so keen that she can tell at a taste the complete history of a bourbon—the proof, the year, the season, and in some cases even the month it was made.

Says she, "What I look for in a bourbon is a balance of flavor. It should not taste overly alcoholic, nor woody. It should leave a clean aftertaste in your mouth, an impression of smoothness. The aroma should be fruity. A fine bourbon has no saline taste and no bite, or medicinal flavor. It mustn't taste acid, and when you rub it on your hands it mustn't smell musty or in any way sharp . . ."

"The aroma should be—almost fruity is the word." She was talking about Old Forester.

In order to be a good judge of whiskey you need not be a drinker. The best tasters rarely swallow a drop. Even a few sips will blind the palate to certain subtleties. Smoking is ruinous and so is chewing gum.

Five Ways to Sense

Different people have different ways of making an appraisal. After 61 years of judging his own as well as other people's bourbon, J. P. (affectionately known as Pappy) Van Winkle, president of Stizel-Weller Distillery suggests five tests which he calls: 1. the Bead; 2. the Cling; 3. the Empty Glass; 4. the Palm; 5. the Sip.

1. The Bead—Old Timers always shook the bottle gently to watch the bubbles rise and break. The higher the proof or alcoholic content up to 100, the richer the bead and the longer it lasts. Such a test was important before government regulations took over and during prohibition as a protection against watered whiskey. However some unscrupulous bar men have used a "beading oil." Nowadays one shakes the bottle of bonded bourbon just for the luxurious pleasure of watching.

2. The Cling—For this test you fill a jigger or snifter half full, slowly swirl the glass and watch the driplets gather. The richer the whiskey the more it adheres to the sides of the glass. A very full-bodied bourbon will seem almost oily.

3. The Empty Glass—This test reveals aroma. Use the same glass with which you have made the cling test. Empty it but do not rinse or wipe; let it stand uncovered at room temperature for at least an hour or even several hours. If the whiskey is well made the bouquet will remain—rich, delicate and full.

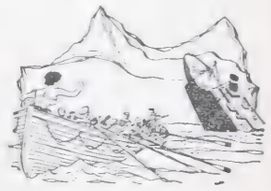
4. The Palm—Many spirituous liquors are evaluated in this way. Pour a few drops into the palms of your hands. Rub your hands together, then bury your nose, take two or three quick sniffs. This is most revealing. But lady beware, your perfumed hand lotion or bath oil may interfere!

5. The Sip—This is the final and almost valid test. There are a number of techniques. Generally, bourbon is diluted with plain water, preferably spring water—equal parts. Take a sip but do not swallow, roll the liquor all around the inside of your mouth. In this way you become aware of a whole galaxy of subtle flavors and aromas. You get the undertones and after-taste.

FOR the bourbon fancier, of course, but also for any hospitable soul, a fine bourbon is a perfect gift. So many bourbons are bottled for giving. The decanter is a bourbon tradition reminiscent of the days when bourbon was sold by the barrel and a pair of bar bottles would be part of the deal. In the past, many bar bottles and decanters have been works of art as they are today. Contrary to popular notion, rarely is there any increase in price. The cost, the quality and the quantity of one whiskey are the same, regardless of container.

Except for the decanter, there are on the whole few safe "bargains" in bourbon. Unless you are willing to take a long chance, you are wise to become acquainted with the honored names. Most fine whiskey is "fair traded," which means that the price cannot be set below a certain level. As far as quality is concerned, you usually get what you pay for. Flavor, on the other hand, is highly personal and individual. You learn by taste.

Anyone can acquire a liberal education within three minutes. Read the labels; not just one, but all of them. A bottled-in-bond bourbon has three: front, back and a government green-strip label across the top, over the cork.



The label will tell you where the whiskey was made, by whom, in what season (whether spring or fall) and when bottled (where and by whom)—how much alcohol there is in it, how long it has stayed in the barrel.

When comparing prices of various bourbons, remember that in addition to hundred-proof bottled-in-bond, there are 86- and 90-proof straight bourbons. Also bourbon is often bottled in quarts as well as the ubiquitous fifths (of a gallon); also in pints. In some states two-quart bottles and decanters, half pints and miniatures are sold.

For your guidance we have made an alphabetical list of "Great Names in Bourbon"—names you can trust: Ancient Age, Beam's, I. W. Harper, Jack Daniel, James E. Pepper, Kentucky Bred, Kentucky Tavern, Mr. Park and Mr. Tilford, Old Charter, Old Crow, Old Fitzgerald, Old Forester, Old Grandad, Old Taylor, Walker's De Luxe and Walker's Private Cellar, Virginia Gentleman, Wild Turkey, Yellowstone.

Mrs. Brown refused to sink

"Keep rowing or I'll toss you all overboard!"

The threat came from a redhead in corset and bloomers, with a Colt .45 lashed to her waist. And as the lifeboat marked S.S. Titanic lurched into the waves, she rowed too, rowed until her hands bled.

Mrs. Margaret Tobin Brown had come a long way to take charge of that crowded lifeboat. Once penniless, she now had millions. Once semi-illiterate, she now knew five languages. Once spurned by Denver society, she now hobnobbed with nobility.

But, as she said, "You can't wear the social register for water wings." Her $60,000 chinchilla cloak covered three children; her other outer garments she had given to elderly women. She swore, threatened, sang opera, joked—and kept her boat going till rescue came.

Asked how she'd done it, she replied, "Typical Brown luck. I'm unsinkable." But it wasn't luck. It was pluck. And Americans have always had plenty of that. It's one important reason why our country's Savings Bonds rank among the world's finest investments.

WHY HI FI?

be placed up to 200 feet away from the picture tube, which would be mounted in the wall or in a cabinet across the room.

So, in addition to better sound, great flexibility and convenience of operation, hi fi offers the enormous advantage of custom installation. Every system is individually designed to meet the purchaser's needs and decorative scheme. There is no need to settle for mahogany if everything else is painted pine; no need to spend money for a radio if records are all that matter.

Furthermore, hi fi can be designed to meet not only the purchaser's needs but also his pocketbook. Hi fi can be budgeted: $150 this year will buy a good speaker, amplifier and record changer; $50 (or more, of course) next year will add an inexpensive but adequate AM-FM radio tuner; $25 or so the year after will improve the speaker system. Another $100 will make an enjoyable start toward tape recording. (See pages 150 and 151.)

This is an important aspect of high fidelity. It can cost almost anything, from $150 to—well, it is possible to spend $5,000, but it would take a little thought.

High-fidelity systems usually break down into groups of components, or links in the chain. For example, the loud-speaker is a major link. Loud-speakers, without cabinets or enclosures, can be purchased from about $15 to $75 for single speakers, and up to $350 for systems of several speakers. If the enclosure for the speaker is included, those figures should be doubled. Amplifiers, another important link, range in price from about $50 to $150, with equipment for that $5,000 system running around $250.

What goes ahead of the amplifier depends on the individual. An AM-FM tuner, adequate for metropolitan areas, may cost as little as $35 to $60; better ones range as high as $150 to $200. Phonograph record playing equipment ranges from $35 to as much as several hundred dollars, depending on the degree of perfection required. Changers, with cartridge, cost from $60 to $150; turntables (one record at a time) with cartridge and pick-up arm, run from $80 up to $200. Cartridge costs include a diamond-tipped needle or stylus for long-playing records; none other should be used unless frequent needle change is possible.

Because there are so many considerations involved in the selection of individual components, it is a bit risky to try to summarize the data. However, the table on page 141 may be of help in drawing up a tentative budget.

And then there are other items which can make the system increasingly elaborate—tape recorders, $100 to $1,000 or more; television tuners; microphones; extension speakers, and so on.

In helping you to finalize your selection of components, your best friend will be a reliable dealer or high-fidelity specialist. They have had wide experience weighing the various pros and cons of specific equipment in the light of your individual needs and can help evaluate the all-important factor of room acoustics. Some dealers offer a special service of analyzing the acoustics of your living room so that the equipment can be balanced for this very important factor.

To solve the calorie problem where cocktail snacks are concerned, you'll find a made-to-order answer in Holly Farms' dilled vegetables. You can eat your fill with clear conscience and the nibbling affords great enjoyment. Available varieties comprise green-bean strips, carrot strips, cauliflower buds, whole okra, tiny whole beets, midget cucumbers and wee cocktail tomatoes. Array them as a group on a Lazy Susan server, and you've something to please everyone and keep them coming back.

In all the varieties the vegetable remains wonderfully crisp. Pickling is done by old-fashioned methods in stone crocks using Southern recipes that yield a deliciously flavored, dilled result. These quality products are all hand-packed.

A box of any three costs $2.25; of six, $4.45; of 12, $8.75, postpaid. Holly Farms Kitchen, 459 Wagner Place, Memphis 3, Tenn.

About a year ago, I passed along word in this column about Dickinson's inimitable wild mountain-blackberry syrup which was then brand new. Brand new right now, are three additional syrups made respectively of superb boysenberries, Cuthbert raspberries and Oregon loganberries. Like the blackberry variety, these new ones are velvety in consistency, pungent and true to the fresh fruit in flavor. The juice of the berries and sugar, are the only ingredients.

The four varieties, beautifully boxed, are being packed as a unit for gift purposes; it's also an ideal way to buy the syrups for your own use, because that way you get a chance to try them all. Any one of them complements waffles or pancakes with delectable results; you'll find they have high merit also for flavoring chiffon pies, gelatin desserts, blender milk shakes and as dessert sauces.

Dickinson's also produces preserves and jellies that to my way of thinking rank with the most elite of imports. You may have specific interest in a pack containing wild mountain-blackberry preserves and jelly, boysenberry preserves, Golden peach preserves, loganberry jelly. All five are packed in 8-ounce fishbowl jars in a gay, be-ribboned box.

Order the preserve-jelly pack ($4.50) and the 4-syrup pack ($4.95) by mail from B. Altman & Co., Fifth Ave., N.Y.C. 16. (Prices do not include shipping.)

which the Goths at last clanged open when they fell upon Italy." She is also the city of Mantegna's celebrated altarpiece depicting the Madonna and Child surrounded by eight saints. The city of an almost perfectly preserved Roman amphitheater which has seen gladiators and martyrs, medieval heretics and jousting knights, a bullfight in the presence of Napoleon, and Eleonora Duse on her fourteenth birthday making her debut in the role of Juliet. And the city of the lovely pink and cream San Zeno Maggiore, acknowledged queen among Italian Romanesque churches.

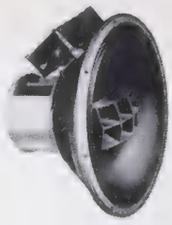
Now don't skip over to the advertisements in alarm. I am not insisting that you devote your winter to working out the lyrics of Catullus in Latin. I realize that we no longer have the time to enjoy ourselves that much. But I think that a handshake, across a translation, with this "tenderest of Roman poets" will deepen your delight in his home town. And I am sure that anyone who invests in a bit of Shakespeare before going will collect at least one dividend. He will see Verona's notorious Tomb of Juliet for what it is: not a tourist trap at all (who is fooled?) but a touching tribute to the reality of an imaginary person.

The poetry of Verona, however, is something more than the enduring fragrance imparted by a pair of names. It is the luminous product of distant hills and the winding Adige, and of battles, princes, palaces, basilicas, pictures, songs, piquant cooking, velvet wines—this list is not meant to imply an order of importance. And of course the magic formula of Verona is also the formula of Paris, Peterborough, Pamplona, Oslo, Ottawa, Istanbul, Caracas and Cologne. Consult a guidebook on any place worth visiting, look toward the horizon, and you will find yourself drawing up a curriculum for a family university.

The courses (there's a useful pun lurking here) you take will depend upon destinations and your interests, but I imagine that wherever you go and whoever you are you will be looking at fine buildings, and so I should like to stress the importance of brushing up your knowledge of architecture.

Living as we do in a country in which the best buildings are often the most recent, we are all prone to underestimate the value of a historical approach to this subject, to assume that the ability to recognize the grand styles in detail is just an academic virtue. It isn't; it is basic in the art of travel. Lincoln Cathedral, Blenheim Palace and the chateaux in the Loire Valley have at least one quality in common: They are all rather blasé creatures who will yield themselves only to instructed admirers.

If, along with a half million of the rest of us, you are going to Europe next summer, I recommend some winter browsing in An Outline of European Architecture, by Nikolaus Pevsner. He covers the centuries between Charlemagne and Frank Lloyd Wright with a nice tact about our span of attention, and a refreshing absence of prejudice. He belongs to the group of modern scholars who have taken another look at what in the days of Ruskin used to be dismissed "decadent," and so he is especially good at illuminating once-neglected treasures—jewels like San Carlo alle Quattro Fontane, Borromini's marvelous little Baroque church at Rome.



Many of the fallacies which Professor Pevsner avoids and which can keep us from enjoying beautiful buildings are analyzed wittily and at length in Geoffrey Scott's The Architecture of Humanism, a work which is both a profound general introduction to architectural esthetics and a stimulating study of Renaissance styles. I should say that Scott is as indispensable for a living-room tour of Italy as Henry Adams is for a December fireside dream of Mont-Saint-Michel and Chartres.

Specific treatises on the styles of the region you are planning to visit will be listed in your guidebook, which is one of several excellent reasons for not waiting until June to buy something better than a skeleton itinerary.

And that reminds me of some good news in this department: The famous Guides Bleus, cherished by French tourists for exactly a century now, are at last beginning to appear in English, under the labels of Hachette World Guides and Hachette World Albums, the latter being collections of photographs built around essays. The regular volume on Greece and an album on Turkey have already appeared in translation, and others are supposed to be in the works. They are worth investigating for almost any purpose, and especially for their solid sections on architecture.

If you find the going getting heavy in your Hachette, Scott or Pevsner, you can always try giving yourself a lift with a poem—I hope

The Practical Gardener finds...

Your lawn will be greener this winter if you continue to feed it regularly. But if you live in a cold climate, better apply PMA mercury (the crabgrass killer) about now to keep snowmold and other cold weather fungus pests under control.

If you live in a house with radiant heat in the floor you've probably discovered that potted plants can't be set on the floor because the heat dries out the soil too fast. Best solution is to set them on a sheet of asbestos elevated about a foot off the floor.

●

This year when you order seeds and plants forgo the mixed varieties. Buy instead pure varieties, and six or a dozen of a single kind of plant. Your reward will be a spectacular show and a new distinction for your garden.

If you have tried growing tulips without chilling the bulbs you know that you get only leaves, no blooms. You can buy the "pre-cooled" bulbs florists use, or you can store the bulbs in your refrigerator (not freezer) for 6 weeks—or for indoor bloom in cold weather areas you can plant them in pots, store them outdoors under hay for 6 weeks.

●

If you happened to receive any plants by mail last year that were wrapped in polyethylene instead of the usual wet moss and brown paper you know that plants from anywhere in America can arrive fresh and sure to grow. Makes it practical now to buy from specialists no matter how far away.

●

Lawns have been watered at mid-day for years where irrigation is common but still some gardeners in other parts of the country hesitate to turn the water on when the sun is shining for fear they will "burn the leaves." Not a chance: Water your lawn whenever it's most convenient for you.

●

Local nurserymen seem less and less interested in offering wide variety in plants. Today in many areas you have to seek out the mail-order catalogs of the specialists if you want other varieties in a particular group of plants than the standard few in the local sales lot. Have you sent for your 1956 seed and nursery catalogs yet? The best plants go to the earliest orders.

●

Winter is the time to prune your trees. Cuts heal faster, and it is easier to see what you are doing. But if you are in a cold climate, keep out of your trees in frosty weather. Frozen bark rips off easily—so easily that just a little slip of your foot and your tree suffers a serious injury.

●

Should you replant an elm if Dutch Elm disease has killed an old elm? Yes. Chances are good that it will grow thriftily for you and so escape the fate of the old tree. Feed and water regularly, of course, and spray with DDT to keep bark beetles from living on it. They spread the disease.

●

If you are looking for an interesting tall perennial, try Plume Poppy. It gets 8 to 10 feet high and has distinctive gray-green leaves and "plumes" of tan and white when in bloom from midsummer until fall.

If you have planted any evergreens this fall, better help them through the first winter with special protection against winter sunburning. You don't have to resort to old-fashioned wrapping in burlap that looks so unsightly. Use instead a quick spraying now with one of the new latex materials nurserymen use when forced to transplant trees and shrubs in midsummer. It's sold as Wilt Pruf by nurserymen, comes in 8-ounce squeeze bottles or by the quart to go through your regular garden sprayer.

●

Have you been leaving the grass clippings as mulch for your lawn? If you have been doing this for two or three years you may notice that rainwater doesn't get down through the "thatch" the way it should. You can avoid this if once a year you give a "close shave" (down to $\frac{3}{4}$" or less) with a high speed rotary power mower (its blade spins parallel to the ground instead of revolving as a reel as in the conventional power mowers). You will find that the rotary mower will pull up the year's accumulation of clippings and leave them on top of the stubble where they are easy to sweep up. Your lawn will look brown because you have cut back into the brown sheaths that surround the blades of grass, but will be green again in a few days.

If you are still pushing a wheelbarrow instead of using a 2-wheel garden cart you are making gardening more work than it needs to be. If you have put off making the switch because you didn't want to give up the convenience of easily removed sides, then look into the garden carts that substitute a roller for the wheels and do have sides that come off to leave a flat-bed carrier.

●

Gardeners have long known that walnut trees leave some kind of chemical in the soil which makes lawns under them thin and poor. If you have hickory trees you may have suspected something similar was happening. Try raking up the husks and nuts and the grass will thrive. Apparently with hickories it's a matter of smothering by the mass of husks and nuts (they don't rot for years) rather than a chemical released into the soil.

●

Summer winds and rains may have bent or broken your chrysanthemums this year. The solution isn't in unsightly staking but in growing your chrysanthemums from cuttings rooted no earlier than June. This insures sturdy, dwarf plants (up to 30" high) that stand up to wind and rain. Either buy rooted cuttings for delivery by mail in mid-June, or root your own then and throw away the old parent plant saved from the year before.

Organic gardening is an intriguing idea, but don't let it lead you to put any greasy or fatty garbage into the compost pile. They quickly water-seal a soil, also kill off the soil bacteria which a healthy soil needs.

you don't mind my inserting all this propaganda for verse. Wordsworth's sensitivity, in the sonnet mentioned at the beginning of this article, to "that branching roof Self-poised" is worth several prose paragraphs on the Gothic science of thrust and counter-thrust. And I can't resist quoting the following from W. H. Auden's On This Island:

> Cathedrals,
> Luxury liners laden with souls,
> Holding to the east their hulls > of stone. . . .

Some benevolent publisher should get out an anthology of architectural poetry for armchair tourists. My sector of the market is wide open.

In fact, all sorts of anthologies might be put together, for the muse of living-room tourism, once she is admitted to the circle at the hearth, usually turns out to be more of a mother of all the arts than philosophy ever was. Architecture, for example, will eventually set you to meditating on history, partly because architecture is itself often a kind of frozen history.

When you turn the corner from the medieval wing of a French chateau and suddenly see the arabesques of fifteenth-century Italy creeping up a pilaster, you are seeing not only the beginning of the Renaissance style in France, but also the return of the rough French barons from their first wars in the classical land beyond the Alps, campaigns which are said to mark the start of the era of nationalism in which we are still living. To the tuned mind those little curlicues in stone will look like the sound of far-off trumpets.

Another reason for putting history on your list is that the personality of a historian, his intellectual ghost, can add an indefinable glory, a serious Washington-slept-here quality, to a place. Italy is forever a changed essay: It is no longer just Italy, it is also the place Burckhardt wrote about. Even an amateur historian may perform this feat: There are people for whom Antwerp will always be in essence the extraordinary commercial Babylon visited around 1560 by the shrewd Florentine banker Ludovico Guicciardini. You will find his observations in the Viking Portable Renaissance Reader.

But of course history does not need the help of architecture or a writer's personality. Facts are enough. The old market place in Rouen is certainly one of the most ordinary squares, architecturally speaking, in France, and yet, for the traveler who has read an account of the execution of Joan of Arc, there are few more moving experiences in Europe than to stand near the plain marker in the pavement and hear in imagination that final, heartbreaking whisper: O Rouen, Rouen, then thou wilt be my last home!

I have left the subject of painting, the third indispensable pre-travel requirement, to the last because here I assume that you will do your home work without any urging. You will, I hope, dip into a Bernard Berenson chapter or two, and be amazed once again at his clarity on the Italian schools, and properly saddened by his opinions on modern art. And you will probably want to acquire the handsome Skira volume of reproductions which fits your route into the past.

If, however, this happens to be your first trip to Europe, two sound reasons for looking at reproductions before you leave home may not occur to you. Let me back into the first: What if you had to listen to all of Beethoven's symphonies, for the first time in your life, one right after the other, under the pressure of knowing that you might never hear them again? Wouldn't your system of appreciation get so clogged that you would develop a defensive psychic deafness? Well, that is roughly the equivalent of the painting experience people have when they try to do the Tate, Louvre, Uffizi and Vatican without first going through an imaginary version of these museums.

The other reason is more amusing. A surprising number of European paintings have been done directly from nature, with a few corrections for the sake of art or of personal vision, and if you are a collector of color prints you will have agreeable starts of recognition all over the Continent. You will see Monets in the valley of the Seine, Cézannes in the countryside around Aix-en-Provence, and the backgrounds of many Italian masterpieces in the hills around Florence, Arezzo and Assisi.

By that time, as you may have suspected from the drift of this piece, I shall be somewhere in Italy practicing what I preach. I am on my way right now with Eleanor Clark's excellent and original Rome and a Villa, and ahead lies a book whose title laps at the mind like the rococo waves on the Lido of Venice. It is Winters of Content and Other Discursions on Mediterranean Art and Travel by Osbert Sitwell.

BOOKS FOR GARDENERS

Practical Gardening for Amateurs by A. G. L. Hellyer. Transatlantic Arts, Inc., Hollywood by the Sea, Florida. 1954. $3.75.

Britishers have used this book for years as their standard guide for new gardeners. The new edition is up-dated considerably in its recommendations, and despite its obvious limitations by way of differences in climate, the book has much to offer American gardeners.

Certainly all who travel to Great Britain should read Hellyer to better understand what they are seeing in British gardens.

Wild Flower Gardening, by Norman Taylor. 128 pages. Van Nostrand, New York. 1955. $3.95.

This is a pleasant little book, with the erudition you'd expect from a distinguished horticultural encyclopedist. The comments on such a prosaic plant as beach grass in the discussion of "seashore plants" on page 67 and 68 are especially fine.

The beginning gardener may be annoyed by the encyclopedic nature that catalogs all plants but gives few clues as to which to try first. Fortunately, even the beginning gardener will recognize that the book jacket advice to use wildflowers to "give your flower beds a different touch" is the exact opposite of what author Taylor believes. He believes in wildflower gardening, not wildflowers scattered in a garden. Thirty-two pages of colored photographs are unusually effective guides to what the plants really look like. —J. E. H.

Free-wheeling cart sprayer

A cart sprayer de luxe, with balloon tire wheels on roller bearings to make the large tank easy to handle would please most any gardener, man or woman. The complete unit, with five-gallon capacity $44.50.

☐ Roll of paper or plastic-covered wires for training plants and lots of odd garden jobs. 250 feet, $1.

☐ Load of crushed rock for driveway, terrace or between plants for textured interest and to cut maintenance. $2 a bushel.

☐ Collection of catalogs from nurseries who specialize in a plant or groups of plants you know to be favorites: holly, other evergreens, clematis, dahlias, old roses, African violets, gloxinias.

☐ Gift box of bromeliads for an indoor garden. Five perfect plants packaged to mail cost about $6.

☐ Clippers or pruning shears, the best you can find; try them in your own hand for comfort and easy use. Under $5.

☐ Mosaic for terrace. Buy or commission one to be made to owner requirements.

☐ A rare or hard-to-find flowering tree or shrub. You can order it to be delivered when the weather is right in spring.

☐ Lightweight garden cart, maneuverable, but able to carry a heavy load. $7.50.

☐ Pre-cooled tulip, hyacinth, lily of the valley, or daffodil bulbs already potted and ready to set in a sunny window for indoor bloom. Six tulips, $1.20.

☐ Leafmold, compost or sawdust in plastic bags. To someone who gardens indoors or in the city, you might give rich sterilized soil, washed sand, even gravel. These are things real gardeners need, but can't always get conveniently in small quantities.
